Chapter 190

Patrick fell silent for a moment before finally shaking his head. That relationship was in the past, and he chose not to look back on it.

Sophie also noticed the striking luxury car and wondered who was inside it. As she looked through the slightly tinted windows, she felt that the person inside the car looked familiar, but she wasn't sure.

After parking somewhere far away from Sophie, Patrick and Jack entered the sports arena and sat in a corner opposite the recruitment booth of Drakengard Games. They smoked as they discussed the recruitment process.

As Drakengard Games was rapidly expanding and in urgent need of employees, they didn't mind offering high salaries to attract outstanding talents.

The career fair was packed with people, and Drakengard Games' recruitment booth was crowded with students who had come to submit their resumes.

Drakengard Games was now at its peak. Its competitiveness was comparable to that of other major corporations, and its salary and career prospects were all rather attractive.

Patrick had studied computer science in university, so he was familiar with many of the applicants. For the stronger candidates, he directly contacted the recruiters to arrange medical checkups and interviews for them.

As the employment prospects nowadays weren't optimistic, the students who were directly hired were ecstatic. For ordinary people, joining Drakengard Games would undoubtedly be a huge leap in their careers.

Meanwhile, the students who didn't receive an interview opportunity seemed disappointed.

To their surprise, Sophie and her classmates also showed up to apply to Drakengard Games.

From Sophie's expression, it seemed like she was eager to join Drakengard Games.

When she inadvertently spotted Patrick in the corner, she was stunned for a second before quickly looking away. She thought he was here to apply for a job as well, but he could only stay in the corner due to the cruel fact that he had been expelled from the university.

Perhaps she still had feelings for Patrick, but the reality had led them to choose different paths.

When Sophie handed her resume to the recruiter, the staff member took a quick glance at the document.

At that moment, the manager at the side signaled to the staff member to pause his work and hand two glasses of iced orange juice to Patrick and Jack.

Finally, one of the women asked the staff member cautiously, "Excuse me... who is that man? Is he one of your employees?"

Even for a student from a prestigious institution like Alnewgo University, securing a job at Drakengard Games despite the competitive job market was undoubtedly a huge step toward success.

Although the question was rather abrupt, they were eager to know why the seemingly condescending staff of Drakengard games were so respectful toward Patrick.

The staff member smiled and explained, "You might not know this, but Mr. Patrick Hamilton is actually the founder and CEO of Drakengard Games. He has personally come here because he heard that Alnewgo University has many talents."

As the staff member spoke, he looked at Patrick with great admiration.
