Chapter 193

Amelia shook her head. She had no idea why Jack was here, and she had no interest in guessing. She certainly couldn't see any connection between Jack and the IT summit.

She knew that Jack was Soul, but he was no longer the famous celebrity he used to be and had become just another ordinary person. Although Amelia felt bad for Jack, she didn't believe he could return to his peak, let alone participate as a singer in a summit organized by the government and attended by CEOS.

Seeing that Amelia wasn't going to say anything, Queenie made her own guess. "I think he's here for a job interview."

"A job interview?" Amelia repeated doubtfully, looking confused.

Queenie nodded confidently and explained, "He's dressed so formally. What else could he be doing here besides attending a job interview? Don't tell me he's here to attend the summit. That's impossible. Besides, it's the summer break now. I heard that the guys from his dorm are either travelling or working summer jobs."

In fact, many companies in the Imperial Building were recruiting temporary workers, and most of the applicants were university students.

Queenie's analysis made sense, and Amelia also found it quite plausible.

As Jack slowly walked into the Imperial Hotel, he realized that there were actually other events taking place aside from the IT summit hosted by the government.

Sure enough, as Jack walked toward the elevators to head to the top floor, the 88th floor, he came across a film crew holding a launch party. To his surprise, Feena's name was on the guest list.

Jack was a little surprised. Had Feena joined the entertainment industry?

However, Jack wasn't sure if it was the Feena he knew. After all, there were many people with the same name.

But then again, Jack thought that the possibility was high, as Feena had gained some fame through the Youth Vocal Showcase. Besides that, she was beautiful and had remarkable talent.

If Feena had really gotten a role in this fantasy TV series, it would undoubtedly be a huge boost to her career, regardless of how small the role was.

Just as Jack was lost in his thoughts, Patrick called to ask for his location so that he could meet up with him.

As Jack was waiting, he ran into Mia and Thomas unexpectedly. They were walking toward the elevators with a middle-aged man.

The man was the general manager of Ellen Games, a company that was somewhat famous in the industry. Its scale was much smaller compared to Drakengard Games, but it was a veteran in the industry.

Jack was surprised to find that Mia and Thomas were also attending the summit. They were wearing the Ellen Games' company badges on their chests.

The badges clearly indicated their roles. They were the secretary and assistant of Ellen Games.

When Jack noticed them, they also caught sight of him. There was a flicker of surprise in Mia's eyes, but then she immediately averted her gaze.

To them, Jack was just a poor student. It would be embarrassing to talk to someone like him at a high-end IT summit that was organized by the municipal government and attended by CEOS from all around the world.

Jack also pretended not to know them and waited quietly for Patrick.

At that moment, Ryan Carter, the CEO of Ellen Games, noticed Thomas' and Mia's abnormal reactions upon seeing Jack and asked curiously, "Do you know him?"

Thomas and Mia immediately denied it. Mia shook her head vigorously and said, "You must be mistaken. How could we possibly know a waiter?"

Judging from Jack's formal attire, he could either be an elite attending the summit or a waiter. And in their eyes, he could only be a waiter.
