Chapter 284

As for Ray, Hunter, Arianna, and Michelle's opinions, they no longer mattered to Bella. Jack had used his Bentley to give them a rude awakening.

When she walked into the dorm room, Bella saw Luna and Gigi chatting with each other. Luna was amusedly retelling her encounter with a senior named Deacon Waters. He had wanted to pursue her, but she had rejected him.

Luna had a clear vision of her future partner. She believed that the ideal boyfriend was a tall, handsome, and wealthy man who drove around in a car that was worth over half a million dollars. But despite rejecting him, Luna started to praise Deacon, saying that he was actually a good guy. He was well-liked on campus, he just wasn't her type.

Her words seemed to be aimed at Bella. In a gentle voice, she said, "Bells, actually Deacon's a pretty great guy! At the very least, he's way better than that loser boyfriend you picked up from who knows where.

"Do you want to consider dating him? I can hook you guys up! Although he's not my type, he's still a member of the Entrepreneurs Association. I heard he even received a capital of two million dollars recently!"

Bella just smiled, turning a deaf ear to Luna's suggestion.

Gigi felt that Luna's words had crossed the line. She spoke up to defend Jack, "You can't put Jack down like that. He's really good at basketball, and he's handsome too."

Luna didn't agree. She said with a smirk, "I truly don't see anything good about him. Will playing basketball put food on the table? Can he make it as a professional basketball player?

"No matter how skilled he is, he's just considered average when compared to professional players. He won't even be able to join the Entrepreneurs Association. Do you even know the type of people who are allowed into the Association?"

Gigi shook her head. The Entrepreneurs Association operated on an invite-only basis. To Gigi, its workings were shrouded in mystery.

"Have you heard of Troy Ellis? He's the CEO of a multinational corporation with a market value of 100 billion dollars. There's also Francis Long, Henry Doherty, and Jasmine Wolfe. All of them are presidents of companies that are worth hundreds of billions of dollars. All of them share one characteristic-they were all members of the Entrepreneurs Association.

"To put it in simple terms, the Entrepreneurs Association is the playground for Alnewgo University's future leaders in the business world. Not only did Deacon receive a capital of two million dollars from Troy, but he also got to have dinner with him. Did you know? An opportunity to dine with Mr. Ellis was once auctioned for over a million dollars!"

Gigi's jaw had gone slack as she listened to Luna. Her eyes were filled with disbelief. The people that Luna named were all famous in the finance circle. They were people who were far out of reach of an ordinary person. Gigi was surprised to find out that they were all once members of the Entrepreneurs Association.

Could Troy truly get a headstart from being a member of the Entrepreneurs Association? Could he become a CEO of a super company? Gigi was stunned speechless by the future possibilities.

Luna felt a sense of superiority wash over her as she watched Gigi's reaction.

However, Bella was completely disinterested in the topic. She sat in front of the mirror and watched her reflection as she daydreamed. She would smile to herself every now and again as if she had thought of something particularly happy.

"Bells, what's up with you?" Luna asked curiously.

Bella didn't answer her. She knew in her heart what Luna's reaction would be if she shared with her everything that had transpired today. Her expression would be priceless.

Bella thought that life could be so strange sometimes. She felt as if God was looking out for her.

During that hot summer, she had been arguing with Andres. Jack had come along then, dressed in knock-off branded clothes and carrying a worn-out luggage bag. He had unwittingly been dragged into the fight by Bella, like a rabbit that had accidentally stumbled into a trap.

Bella still remembered telling Andres that if she lived a difficult life in the future, it would all be Andres' fault. Andres hadn't been moved and had left without a glance back at her.

Bella had no idea of knowing then that the innocent man that she had dragged into her fight was actually a diamond in the rough. Although she couldn't be sure what grade of diamond Jack would end up being, a diamond was still superior compared to a shapeless pile of sand.
