Everything had been planned beforehand. The alumni took turns taking to the stage to talk about their outstanding achievements in different industries. Not only did they share their own experiences, but they also encouraged the students to work hard.

Some of them even promised to help out their juniors if they found themselves facing challenges in their life or work in the future. Their juniors could seek them out whenever they needed to, and they would help them out of their tight spots, which earned them thunderous applause from the students.

Everyone who went up onto the stage to speak were the cream of the crop in their respective fields. There was a core figure in the nuclear military industry, as well as a researcher who had dedicated her whole life to the field of Zargonian Studies.

Alexi was among those who were fortunate enough to be invited to give a speech on the stage. He was a big shot in the finance world and was also known as "the wolf on Fall Street".

His impact was so great that he was partially responsible for the direction the wind blew in the finance industry. A few words from him was also all it would take for there to be a change in the financial market.

When he walked onto the stage, loud applause resounded from the audience that were seated below. With a smile stretched across his face, Alexi began his speech.

"I was one of the students who was personally taught by George. I agree wholeheartedly with what he said earlier, that every generation will have their own fair share of talents. I myself have experienced the validity of this statement.

"You might not know this, but what I am most grateful for this year isn't the surge in the stock market. It's also not how my son was able to enroll in Harverd Business School to pursue his master's degree. What I am most grateful for is the opportunity to witness a fellow student of Alnewgo University achieve greatness with the company he founded in the overseas market."

The people below the stage began to discuss amongst themselves, wondering which company Alexi was talking about that was founded by an Alnewgo University student. Some students guessed that he could be referring to Genesis Games, since the company had caused a huge sensation in Zargonia recently. Furthermore, it was slated to turn into a public-listed company on the Masdaq Stock Exchange soon.

"That's right. I'm sure some of you have already correctly guessed what I am most proud of, which is Genesis Games. I even received some news earlier that they've achieved spectacular financial results. With the founding of Genesis, a giant in the internet industry has been born, which will no doubt lead to a successful expansion into the overseas market," Alexi exclaimed excitedly.

"But there's not much point in me saying all of this. I'm just grateful to be able to be a part of the old guard of Alnewgo University who can push the new generation of students to a brighter future. The man that is charging forward to this bright future is indeed a part of Alnewgo University, and he's still a student as well. He is seated amongst us, celebrating the university's 100th year of establishment with all of us."

Alexi's declaration was akin to a bomb exploding on the peaceful surface of a lake. The entire stadium immediately erupted into an uproar.

The School of Finance students were especially loud and raucous. Most of them had already guessed the mysterious identity of the founder when they saw Alexi accompany Jack away earlier.

Isaac's eyes were as wide as saucers when he stared at Jack, who was seated in the front. He tugged on the hem of Samuel's shirt and stammered, "What the fuck! The person that Alexi is talking about... Could it... Could it really be Jack?"

On the other hand, Joshua was still in denial of the truth. "What kind of joke is this? Does Jack look like the type of guy to have assets that are worth over 100 billion dollars? The clothes that he buys don't even cost more than 100 dollars!"

Isaac and Joshua dreamt about earning 10 million dollars in five to 10 years after graduating from Alnewgo University. They planned to buy a house in Alnewgo, so their future wives and children would be able to live a comfortable life. They had no idea that while they had been dreaming about that, Jack had already surpassed them so greatly, to the point where they couldn't even see his silhouette in the distance any longer.

A boss of a company that was worth 100 billion dollars? It was unbelievable.

Isaac was convinced that even if he won the lottery in this life, he wouldn't be able to achieve even one percent of Jack's current wealth. He would wake up with a smile if he could even earn a thousandth of that astonishing number.

Alexi did not reveal the identity of the mysterious student. He descended from the stage after finishing his speech.

George took the stage once more to replace Alexi, earning himself another round of applause. After George finished his speech, the other school administrators went up onto the stage and continued to speak passionately.

Chapter 592

As the sky continued to darken, the centennial celebration also neared its end. Since it was a special occasion, George invited all the alumni who were present to get onto the stage to take a group photo to commemorate this unforgettable moment.

The outstanding alumni who had traveled from all over the world went up to the stage. They were wearing bright smiles as they prepared for the photo.

Lyla and Sidney, who were in the crowd of students, were shocked when they noticed that Jack, their classmate, was one of the people standing on the stage. In their eyes, only the Alnewgo University alumni that had achieved greatness deserved to be on the stage. These people were corporation presidents who were worth over 100 million dollars, senior government officials, or leading experts in the academic field.

However, Jack was just a normal classmate of Feena's. They couldn't understand what Jack had achieved that would allow him to stand on the stage. Could it be due to how Jack had shown his bravery in the past? It didn't seem to be enough for him to earn a spot on the stage.

Luna, Kyle, Gigi, and Remy had also seen Jack. Their eyes were filled with disbelief. It was a great honor for anyone to be able to stand on the stage. It was incomprehensible that a student was worthy enough to stand amongst the other

Kyle's voice dripped with confusion as he asked, "Don't you ladies know him?" Kyle had a vague recollection of Jack after they had dinner together that night. "That's right," Luna replied while nodding. "He was my old roommate's boyfriend. You even treated him to dinner once. But what right does he have to be on the stage? I bet the university doesn't know that he's been expelled."

Although Jack used to own a Bentley, he had apparently been fired from Drakengard Games some time ago. His appearance on the stage was indeed befuddling. The only explanation they could come up with was that Jack had buried his failures, so the university had also been duped by his lies.

"But isn't the person standing next to him Alexi Bloomsfield, the wolf on Fall Street?" Kyle said with a sparkle in his eye. "His words have a great impact on the market value of a company."

When Kyle laid eyes on Alexi, his eyes immediately brightened. He had planned to pay a visit to Alexi after returning to New Vork. His company's finance report for the third quarter had produced eye-catching results, so he wanted to use the opportunity to ask Alexi for a specialized report to increase the market value of his company.

Meanwhile, the ladies from the Fellowship Dormitory had also noticed Jack. Anya pointed at Jack and said to Amelia, "Look, isn't that Jack?"

Jessica's voice was uncertain when she answered, "I... don't think that's him?"

But Queenie nodded her head confidently. "There's no mistaking it, that's him. I remember he did indeed receive an invitation. However, the student council members were convinced that he had only received one because the university had made a mistake."

The women came to a realization. It had all been a misunderstanding. However, not everyone could see that Jack was on the stage. One of them was the owner of the foreign language faculty, Charlotte. Her designated seat with the other faculty members was far from the stage, so she couldn't clearly see what was happening. Thus, she didn't really care about what was going on.

After the group photo was taken, the centennial celebration came to a close. The students moved as one toward the canteen, excited to enjoy the benefits the university had prepared for them-an expanded menu and a hearty meal that could be enjoyed at half its normal price.

Chapter 593

The alumni followed George to have dinner at the luxurious Lakeside Hotel that was located on the campus grounds. They were joined by the teachers and counselors of Alnewgo University, as well as the student council and Entrepreneur Association members who had worked hard to maintain order during the celebration.

Clarice and Jack accompanied Alexi on either side of him. Clarice still hadn't found an opportunity to question Alexi regarding Jack's eligibility to participate in the centennial celebration. She also hadn't spoken a word to Jack since Alexi was always between them.

The large party moved as one toward the Lakeside Hotel. Along the way, Jack received a call from Claude. He had great news for Jack-due to Genesis Games' spectacular results in their third quarter finance report, Masdaq had approved all their applications.

Their next step was to invite Jack, Claude, and a team of their elite staff to prepare a variety of different reports, after which they would embark on a global roadshow. They would officially enter the final stages of preparation to turn Genesis into a public-listed company.

The importance of the roadshow cannot be stressed enough as it would directly affect the market value of Genesis once it was a public-listed company. Timing was of the essence, so Claude had already booked a plane ticket for Jack. The flight would depart for Federia the next morning.

Jack's heart overflowed with gratitude after he ended the call with Claude. He had been waiting for this moment for much too long, and it was finally within his grasp.

His eyes couldn't help but stray toward Clarice, who was only a short distance away. She was the one who had torn Bella away from him, and she was also the driving force behind Jack's determination to turn Genesis into a public-listed company.

Clarice didn't notice Jack's gaze on her. She continued to exchange pleasantries with her former classmates, pretending as if the conflict between Jack and herself didn't exist.

The party finally made it to Lakeside Hotel. The hotel was illuminated by the bright lights that were blazing within, which lent to its festive and welcoming atmosphere. The hotel manager, Raydon, stood at the hotel's entrance and personally welcomed all who entered the building with a dazzling smile on his face.

Jack, Alexi, and Clarice were seated at the same table during the dinner banquet. George and the other school administrators were seated at the table next to theirs. The university teachers sat at a table that was near Jack. Amongst them was his homeroom teacher, Uriah, as well as the president of the Entrepreneurs Association, Hannah.

As he gazed at Uriah, Jack began to wonder how he would approach him this time to request for a leave of absence. After all, he would be gone for quite a long time if he was to participate in the global roadshow that would kick off in New Vork. He also needed to be present for the bell-ringing when Genesis officially entered the Masdaq Stock Exchange as a public-listed company.

Jack felt a little awkward as he recalled the frequency in which he had been requesting for leave from Uriah, along with the displeased look he would wear whenever Jack approached him. After all, Jack hadn't contributed much to his class. He wasn't part of any clubs, didn't apply for scholarships, or participate in class activities.

On the contrary, he was always involved in fights, skipped class often, and frequently requested for leave. It was reasonable that Uriah disliked him.

Uriah had a strong impression of Jack. He still believed it was mere coincidence that Jack had received an invitation, and that he had only tagged along with the group to enjoy a free meal with them. However, Uriah had no intention to expose Jack. After all, reputation was important to a student.

What puzzled Uriah the most was how unbothered Jack seemed as he joined the dinner banquet. Was he not afraid of being exposed? His fearless attitude was impressive to say the least.

The dinner banquet officially started after George gave a short celebratory speech. The atmosphere remained lively throughout the banquet as everyone engaged in conversation with each other. Everyone present was a leader or a reputable figure in their respective fields. The guests would have even more things to talk about if they were former schoolmates who hadn't seen each other in years.

The centennial celebration had provided the perfect platform for them to gather around and discuss the endless possibilities that the future held. Meanwhile, George rose to his feet and took the initiative to give a toast to everyone who was present.

Seeing how George was personally toasting them, the guests also rose to their feet. It didn't matter where they were seated, or how precious their reputation was, they raised their glasses at George in return.

The atmosphere of the banquet immediately turned more lively. George approached the table Jack was seated at after he was done toasting the first table. The guests at the table rose to their feet with their wine glasses raised after noticing George's imminent approach.

George swept his gaze in an arc across the guests at the table. His eyes lingered on Alexi and Jack before a bright smile broke across his face.

Quietly, he said, "My dear students, most of you here were my students once upon a time. As your previous homeroom teacher, I'm so immensely proud to be able to witness your wonderful accomplishments today."

He paused for a moment before continuing, "I can't help but recall the memories from over two decades ago when I look at all of you. You were so young then, and I wasn't as old as I am now. It's hard to believe that 20 years have passed by just like that. All of you have become the pillars of this country while I have finally aged."

His words triggered melancholy feelings in the hearts of the former classmates who were present at the table. He was right. Time waited for no one, after all. 20 years had passed in just the blink of an eye. Their previous homeroom teacher now had a full head of white hair, while they themselves were already middle- aged.

George grinned before changing the topic. "But I'm very happy today! Although we've all grown old, Alnewgo University's future is secured. Every generation will have their fair share of talents."

The former classmates nodded in agreement. They watched as George rounded the table to stand before Jack. Alexi had informed George of Jack's identity beforehand. When he studied Jack, his eyes were filled with gratitude. Jack's vitality allowed George to see the hopeful future that stretched ahead of him.

He patted Jack's shoulder and asked, "You're Jack Holland, correct?"

Jack smiled as he nodded. Except for Alexi, everyone else at the table, including Clarice, didn't know why George had decided to approach Jack. Even the people at the other table, such as Hannah and Uriah, were watching George with curious eyes.

George said slowly, "I bet that all of you don't know who this young man is, so allow me the honor of introducing him. He's the founder of Genesis Games, Jack Holland. Genesis was the company that I was talking about when I was on the stage. Jack is a prime example of my earlier statement of 'every generation will have their fair share of talents'."

The banquet hall was in uproar after the guests heard George's words. They stared at Jack with disbelief in their eyes. Jack was much too young. He was only a junior in the university, and yet he was the one responsible for founding Genesis Games? In their mind, they had always assumed that the founder was someone who was in their mid-forties.

Although Genesis wasn't a public-listed company yet, everyone who knew about the capabilities of the company predicted that it would have a market value of over 100 billion dollars. It was an extremely impressive achievement that would make anyone sigh in awe.

George continued speaking, "If you're unfamiliar with Genesis Games, you can look into it. Although it's not a public-listed company yet, its products have already taken the whole world by storm. I promise you that this legendary company will fill all of you with pride!"

The expressions of the people around them turned even more curious and interested. Jack had managed to establish such a formidable company despite still being a student. It made the alumni feel a little inferior, even though they themselves were leaders in their own respective fields.

They immediately understood that Jack was no ordinary man. Once Genesis turned into a public-listed company, it would transform to become even more impressive.

The alumni had a trained eye for talent, so they hurried over to engage Jack in conversation. Even though they were successful individuals in their own rights, they still felt like they paled in comparison to Jack.

After discovering that Jack was the founder of Genesis Games, Clarice, Uriah, and Hannah also wore interesting expressions on their faces. Uriah adjusted his black-rimmed glasses and wondered if he was looking at the wrong person. How could he have been unaware of such a legendary figure being a part of his class? The founder of Genesis was the man who always requested for leave and was looked down upon by Uriah?

As for Genesis Games, Uriah wasn't familiar with what company it was, so he sneakily took out his phone to look it up. He took a deep breath of cold air when he realized the large-scale the company operated on.

At the same time, Clarice also pulled her phone out to look up information about Genesis Games. She only knew that Jack was involved with Drakengard Games in the past, but ultimately was fired by the company. When did Jack establish Genesis and what did the company do? Clarice hadn't a clue, so she needed to educate herself. The more information she dug up, the more she felt like she had missed out on something important.

On the other hand, Hannah did not look up Genesis Games. She had already known since long ago that Genesis was the parent company of "Legend of the West" and "Legend of the East". When Hannah had nothing better to do, she would occasionally play "Legend of the West" to pass the time.

She wasn't very knowledgeable about the history behind the Western countries, but her lack of knowledge did not deter her from enjoying the game. The game's beautiful and intricate graphics and long-lasting replayability made Hannah return to the game over and over again. It wasn't just her either, many of her classmates, both men and women, were addicted to the game.

The local players' love for the game was considered quite tame in comparison to the frenzied obsession the players abroad had for it. It was undeniable that it was an extremely successful game. It managed to break down global boundaries, becoming a game that people all over the world were crazy about.

Hannah often paid attention to the news that were related to the game. She would often wonder to herself who was the genius responsible for establishing such an impressive company. She never would have dreamed that the founder was Jack. When she had first received the invitation to pass to Jack, Hannah had initially thought that the university had made a mistake. Now she knew that she was the uneducated one. She recalled her conflicts with Jack. She had declared back then that she would never allow Jack to find success with Alnewgo University's Entrepreneurs Association. When she looked back on the incident, she realized how childish and laughable she had been.

A person who had the capabilities to establish a company such as Genesis Games, that was popular all over the world, wouldn't be bothered with a small club like the Entrepreneurs Association. If Genesis managed to achieve its predicted market value after it became a public-listed company, even the members of the Alumni Association would bow their heads to Jack while begging him to join them.

It was such a shocking and ironic reality. Hannah was rendered speechless, not knowing how to respond to the revelation. To the side, Uriah and Clarice pocketed their phones after they were done. The three of them remained quiet for the rest of the night.

All good things eventually came to an end. It was time for the banquet to wrap up. After dinner was over, Jack and Alexi left Lakeside Hotel together. Alexi was accompanied by a few of his former classmates, one of them being Clarice.

Alexi said to Jack, "Little Holland, when are you traveling to New Vork? Let's meet up when the time comes."

Alexi was already in the know regarding the news of Genesis Games becoming a public-listed company. He knew that it was only a matter of time before it happened.

"I might depart tomorrow," Jack answered. "Everything has been arranged on that side."

"So soon?" Alexi said in surprise. "I still have to stay in Alnewgo for the next few days."

Jack nodded in response. "Claude is very efficient."

Alexi smiled. "Alright then, I won't be able to accompany you to New Vork. However, I still wish Genesis Games success!"

"Thank you," Jack replied, genuinely accepting Alexi's well-wishes.

Jack then finally shifted his gaze toward Clarice, who was standing to the side. She had a smile on her face and still carried herself elegantly, making it difficult for Jack to tell what she was thinking in her heart.

After he was done speaking with Alexi, Jack fixed a smile on his face and asked the question that he had been carrying around in his heart. "Mrs. Cole, I'd like to ask about Bella's whereabouts. Did she really transfer schools?"

Clarice nodded. "Yes, she has left Alnewgo University."

Clarice felt like there were storms raging in her heart when she looked at Jack. Although he had achieved considerable success, she still shook her head. "Jack, I admit that I might have judged you too harshly. Your achievements have far exceeded my expectations. However, can you please leave Bella alone? You have dreams, and so does Bella. If fate allows it, the two of you will meet again."

If Clarice had run into Jack before today, she would have told him directly that it was impossible for the two of them to have a relationship. The distance that separated them couldn't be crossed through hard work alone. It was as wide as the Milky Way.

However, she also had to acknowledge Jack's talents and capabilities. She used to think the distance between them was as wide as the Milky Way, but the distance was shortened now thanks to Jack's efforts.

Later that night when Jack returned to the dorm, he found Isaac, Joshua, and Ronnie engrossed in a heated discussion regarding the centennial celebration as they lay on their beds. The ladies from the Fellowship Dormitory were also present.

When they noticed Jack's arrival, the atmosphere in the dorm suddenly hit a boiling point. Isaac couldn't help but tease in a sardonic tone, "Look who's here! The big boss of our class is back!"

After all, no one actually believed that Jack was a "big boss". It would be a story that was straight out of a fairytale. They had discussed amongst themselves after returning to the dorm and came to the unanimous conclusion that the misunderstanding had all started when Jack first received the invitation.

Jack only laughed at Isaac's teasing and didn't say anything else. He suddenly felt hungry. Although he had eaten during the dinner banquet, the dishes weren't enough to keep his belly filled. He went downstairs to look for more food.

Queenie said, "Jack sure has some thick skin! He didn't even try to defend himself when Isaac was teasing him. Does he really think of himself as a boss?"

Anya pursed her lips together before breaking into a laugh, "If it was me, I would also enjoy being complimented by others. It must feel so good! "

Miranda shook her head. "I feel like Jack was a little embarrassed."

Queenie nodded in agreement as she turned her gaze on Joshua. She encouraged, "You have to work hard, Joshua! Look at how successful Luca is. If you achieve even half of his success, I'll be very happy!"

Isaac chimed in. "Don't worry, Joshua and I will lead our school into the CUBA finals. If we're able to enter the professional league when the time comes, we'll become celebrities!"

Both Queenie and Miranda smiled after hearing Isaac's declaration. Meanwhile, Anya and Jessica could only look on in envy.

The next morning, Jack arrived early at Uriah's office to request for a leave of absence. He didn't need to make up any excuses this time around since Uriah already knew about Jack's true identity.

When Uriah accepted Jack's request slip, he noticed how Jack had requested for a leave of absence that would last half a month, the reason being that he needed to travel to Federia to handle some business. His eyes darted between the slip and Jack. Uriah could no longer view him as an ordinary student. He got to his feet and asked, "You... What will you be doing in Federia?"

With a smile, Jack explained, "Genesis Games is about to become a public-listed company on the Masdaq Stock Exchange. I need to travel to Federia to conduct a roadshow. I also need to be in New Vork for the bell ringing when Genesis becomes public-listed."

"Oh, so that's how it is!"

Uriah was surprised to find out that Genesis Games was about to become a public-listed company. When he had looked into the company the night before, he knew that there was a possibility that Genesis would become public-listed on Masdaq, but he didn't imagine that it would happen so quickly.

The truth was, Uriah was unfamiliar with the process of a company becoming public-listed. However, he did understand that it was an important time for any company. He wanted to remind Jack to take care of himself and his safety, but the words died on his tongue just as they were about to leave his lips. Jack might no longer need this type of advice from him.

It shocked Uriah to realize that Jack had undergone a tremendous change. He was no longer the student who liked to skip classes, who had no other redeeming qualities other than the excellent results he achieved during his university entrance exam. He was only in his junior year, but he was about to become the founder and CEO of a public-listed company.

Jack wasn't a class leader or a club member. He had never won a scholarship, and he would occasionally fail his classes. He seemed to be destined for a life of mediocrity, but the radiance that he gave off now was bright enough to cover up all his past flaws. He was truly a diamond in the rough that only needed someone to polish him for him to sparkle.

Jack was still the top scholar of his province that caught everyone's attention from the first moment he stepped foot onto Alnewgo University's campus. He was a dark horse that exceeded everyone's expectations. Uriah believed that Jack would become a household name once the bell was rung when Genesis Games became a public-listed company.

A bitter smile crossed Uriah's face as he considered all of this. He truly thought that Jack was going to continue resting on his laurels until he faded into obscurity one day. The glow that surrounded Jack now shocked Uriah to the core.

He had once taught Jack about the values and principles of life, but his lessons seemed so laughable and ridiculous when it concerned Jack now. It became clear that a softer approach would only be mercilessly mowed down by brute strength. However, Uriah still felt proud that someone so outstanding was a student of his. Jack would be a part of his conversations for a long time to come.

After a long moment of deep thought, Uriah finally printed his signature on the request slip. As he handed it back to Jack, he realized he should say something.

Uriah pondered for a moment before finally saying, "All the best in turning Genesis Games into a public-listed company! You'll be the pride of Alnewgo University!"

Jack accepted Uriah's well-wishes before turning on his heel and leaving the office.

Uriah sank back into his chair as he watched Jack's retreating back. He sighed as he thought about the impermanence of life and how heroes often emerged in their youth.

It was morning when Samuel drove the Ferrari to send Jack to the airport. Jack then boarded the plane that would bring him to New Vork. Claude had booked a first-class seat for him. As he watched the plane prepare to take off from the ground, he heard laughter echoing from next to him. When he turned to look at the source, he was surprised to see he was seated next to two familiar people— Luna and her boyfriend, Kyle.

Jack didn't think that he would run into them while he was on the plane. He took the initiative and greeted them. "Hello!"

Luna and Kyle had also noticed Jack. Surprise was written all over their faces. A hint of contempt flickered in Kyle's eyes, he hadn't expected Jack to be able to afford a seat in the first-class cabin.

Although Kyle had always been polite and amicable to Luna's friends, he actually looked down on them. He thought that they were quite unremarkable. Since Jack had taken the initiative to greet them, Kyle could only helplessly nod his head in greeting. He quickly shifted his gaze elsewhere, giving Jack the impression that he did not want to interact with him.

On the other hand, Luna was ecstatic to run into Jack. After all, it was always a fortunate thing to be able to meet someone familiar when traveling to a foreign country. Luna couldn't help herself as she asked, "Are you going to New Vork too?"

Jack nodded in response. "Yes, I have some business to handle in New Vork."

"Oh! So it must be your first time visiting New Vork! Let me tell you, New Vork truly is a flourishing city. It's even busier than Alnewgo!"

Luna continued to chatter on. "Kyle is going to bring me to Central Garden, and he's also going to take me to Fall Street to meet a few famous big shots. Do you have any idea how amazing they are? They're the type of people that we could only see on the television screens in the past!

"But I'm going to see them in person this time. I might even ask them for their autographs. They're all reputable figures in the finance circle!" Luna said. Then, she added, "If you need any help when you're in New Vork, don't hesitate to reach out to me!"

It was as if Luna had transformed into the wolf on Fall Street.

Jack could only nod his head politely.

Luna then continued talking. "By the way, have you been to Fall Street? Or are you aware of the financial powers in New Vork's capital? There are huge financial conglomerates like JPMorgan Haste and Morgan Bradley. Oh, there's also the momentous occasion when the bell is rung in Masdaq..."

Luna never seemed to run out of things to say.

Jack listened closely to her endless chattering until she finally stopped and fell asleep from exhaustion. Upon seeing how she was fast asleep in her luxurious seat in the first-class cabin, Jack also turned his head toward the window and slowly slipped into dreamland.

When he woke up, it was already morning in New Vork. Luna and Kyle had already disembarked from the plane. When Jack finally made it out of the airport, Claude and a group of his elite staff were already waiting for him.

Their team then dove right into the busy work of preparations. After that was complete, they would need to host their roadshows, after which they could only wait patiently as the company went through the public-listing process.

Since Genesis Games was founded by a young Zargonian, many of the local news networks paid close attention to the company's public-listing process. Although Genesis' market value might not be as high as other huge companies such as Zali Group and Penguin Corporation, it was still a company that was worth over 100 million dollars, thus attracting many media outlets to report on it extensively.

When news of Jack leading his team to organize a global roadshow spread across the country, major channels, including finance, entertainment, education, and gaming channels, conducted follow-up interviews and reports.

Besides New Vork, this global roadshow would cover cities such as Philcago, Lashington, Ghoston, and many more.

"Another gaming giant with a market value of 100 billion dollars is about to be born!"

"Being such a success in the gaming industry is truly astonishing!"

"He's the pride of the nation! Unveiling the untold story of Jack Holland, the founder of Genesis Games!"

"How did such a young billionaire build something from nothing?"

Genesis Games' creations, "Legend of the West" and "Legend of the East", had swept across the globe, gaining hundreds of millions of loyal fans. Hence, Jack Holland, the founder of Genesis Games, had become a sensational idol.

In the female dormitory of Alnewgo University's School of Music, Feena was singing and playing the guitar. She would be heading to Tarthy City to hold a solo concert soon.

After signing with Starlight Entertainment, the company had worked hard to develop her into a megastar. Feena worked twice as hard, hoping she would gain success.

Lyla and Sidney were watching the news.

When Sidney saw the news about how a young billionaire had started something from nothing, she was bewildered. She said to Feena in an exaggerated tone, "Hey, Feena, look! This billionaire is Jack Holland. Isn't he your classmate?"

Feena put her guitar down, shaking her head. "I don't think so. He comes from a mediocre family."

"Oh!" Sidney nodded, assuming it was just someone with an identical name.

At this moment, Lyla thought of something. She couldn't help but ask, "By the way, Feena, when Sid and I attended Alnewgo University's 100th year celebration, I noticed Jack seated among the distinguished guests and posing for a group photo alongside the accomplished alumni."

"Oh, that's right!" Sidney said, smiling brightly. "Feena, could it be that your dashing hero and alumnus is actually some legendary big shot?"

Feena didn't know how to respond to that.

In fact, Jack was once the famous internet singing sensation, Soul, who had sparked a craze and amassed a vast legion of fans. He had also founded Drakengard Games and even engaged in high-profile discussions with various business leaders at Alnewgo's summit forum.

Back then, Jack was ambitious, stirring the world with his words. However, with the decline of Drakengard Games and various rumors of fraud, Jack was kicked out.

Now, Jack was no longer the young miracle worker he once was. But this did not affect Feena's impression of him. In the end, she was filled with regret.

Could it be him?

Before Feena could verify his identity, her phone rang.

It turned out that the personnel from Starlight Entertainment had arrived to pick her up as her flight to Tarthy City was scheduled in the afternoon.

There was no longer any need for verification. Feena already had an answer. However, this answer would die along with her.

In Alnewgo University's male dorm, Ronnie was watching the news on a gaming channel.

The most eye-catching spot featured a news report on Jack Holland, the founder of Genesis Games, leading his team for a roadshow in Federia.

Recently, Genesis Games had been on fire.

With the revelation that the founder of Genesis Games had created both "Legend of the East" and "Legend of the West", the attention on Genesis Games had skyrocketed once again in the gaming industry.

Chapter 600

When Ronnie saw that "Jack Holland" was mentioned on the news report, he couldn't help but murmur, "Holy shit! Jack, that bastard, has asked for a leave of absence to go on a roadshow!"

Isaac rolled his eyes at Ronnie and said, "Don't make a huge deal out of nothing! Do you think billionaires grow on trees? They're not that easy to come by!"

Ronnie put on a wry smile. He was merely joking, but soon, he had forgotten about it.

Joshua didn't even bother lifting his head as this didn't seem plausible.

It was pointless to talk about Samuel. He had too much on his plate and barely had time to talk.

In the Montclair Conservatory's dorm room, where a delicate fragrance lingered, a beautiful figure quietly stood before the window sill, staring blankly at the bare trees outside.

Her entire being exuded a melancholic beauty.

Bella had been in the Montclair Conservatory for some time.

In this most sacred hall of music, she had immersed herself in relentless study, fully unlocking her musical talent. Even in this prestigious place, she had become a top scholar, and her entire presence had utterly transformed.

She had quietly become the conservatory's most popular goddess, admired by guys across the campus.

Even gifted scholars from nearby prestigious universities, like Fullerton University, came to admire her.

It was rumored that the school even sent her to the Golden Hall to perform.

However, Bella remained unhappy.

Since she left Alnewgo, she had fallen into depression.

Her mother had cut off her contact with Jack, but she couldn't forget him as time passed. Instead, she missed him even more.

During her free time, Bella often immersed herself in deep thought, wondering where Jack was and what he was up to.

Would the passage of time gradually fade his memories of her, or would it only deepen his longing?

Suddenly, her ringtone interrupted her thoughts.

Bella took her phone from her bag, and the word "mother" appeared on the screen.

She answered the call, and her mother's steady yet familiar voice rang through the receiver. "Bella, how are you at school?"

"Oh, I'm okay," Bella responded weakly, laced with a hint of helplessness. Her mother's strict discipline had instilled in her a deep reverence, perhaps even a hint of submission.

"Remember to rest. Don't overexert yourself. Oh, I've gone to Angleria and networked with the lecturers at Angleria Royal Academy of Music, the world's most prestigious music academy. I want to send you there as a transfer student and let you finish your studies there. What do you think?

"Mom, it's too far," Bella rejected the idea.

"Listen to me, dear. I'm only thinking of your future." Her mother's tone carried an undeniable firmness.

After exchanging a few words about everyday matters, her mother repeatedly reminded her to take care of her health before finally hanging up the call.

At this moment, Bella's mother, Clarice, was watching the news from Alnewgo. Every headline had something to do with Jack, the founder of Genesis Games.

Although Genesis Games had yet to go public, it was already poised for launch. In the news reports, Jack was no longer the naive young man of the past. He had transformed into a real industrial pioneer and leader.

Even a proud woman like Clarice had no choice but to admit that the moment the listing bells rang, this young man would finally qualify to stand on the same level as her daughter.

Worry flashed across her eyes, wondering if her daughter knew about this.

Once upon a time, she had told Jack that if he ever amassed a fortune of over a billion dollars, she would consent to him dating her daughter. At that moment, Clarice thought it was a far-fetched dream, one that a small-town bookworm from a small city could never possibly reach.

However, things had turned out in ways she never expected.
