AMALTHEA'S POV

"I - I -" I started before taking a deep breath and opening my eyes, ready to fight the person who held my hand.

Holding the hand holding me in place from behind the pillar, I was about to push the man away when he suddenly pulled me closer, hugging me from behind.

"If I were you, rather than pushing the man who has come to save you, I would hold on to him for dear life," The man said coldly, and I finally recognized his voice.

Alexander? What is he doing here?

"Come with me," He said with a dark look in his eyes, and before I could even blink my eyes, with the speed of light, he brought me out of the dungeons within a few seconds, placing me on the ground gently, making me widen my eyes at him as I finally turned around.

Wait. How does he know the path out of the dungeons? I am sure this isn't the front or back of the dungeon. Unless he has also seen the detailed blueprint, there is no way he would know about it. Does that mean he was also - No. He was here with the alpha. He can't be here to steal something. Maybe he just enquired about it because it's his way of doing work.

"Who the hell are you? How the hell did you know about this route? You are not a normal demon, right? A normal demon can't have this kind of speed," I said, and he glared at me before tilting his head.

"Are you sure this is the thing you should say to someone who saved

"What would I change into? My clothes -" I started, but before I could even end my sentence, a pair of shorts and a t-shirt were placed on my bed gently, making me quirk my brows.

"These are provided by sir. He said they are fresh," the man said before leaving, making me look at the other man, who was probably his right-hand subordinate, as he is always with him.

"You are lucky, miss. Our sir has never risked anything for someone before, let alone a trillion dollars deal," the subordinate said, and I nodded before sitting on the bed after he left, feeling troubled.

A trillion dollars deal? Why would he risk all of that for me? Is this demon so good? I thought before looking at the clothes, smiling helplessly, when I noticed how big it was for me.

After taking off the dirty clothes, I looked at the rare gem that shone again, making me hold it away from my face, and I was perplexed to see how it was making my bracelet shine along with it. Is it some kind of gem bond? I chuckled before shaking my head and wrapping it neatly in my handkerchief and top.

After bathing, I went out of the room, feeling a bit shy in the clothes I was wearing, as it was making me feel embarrassed at how small I looked in them.

The t-shirt was reaching my mid-thighs while the shorts were reaching my knees. Though I was a good 5'10", the clothes were still big for me, and I couldn't help but look away as I passed through some men.

"Can you call Alexander?" I said to the man who had brought the clothes, and as if I said something taboo, everyone around me started looking at me with weird gazes.

"Everyone leave the room," I suddenly heard a cold order from above the stairs, making me look up at the man, whose gaze was fixated on his men.

"Guard the house from outside. I don't want a single man inside," Alexander said before descending the stairs, making me look at him as I noticed his figure for the first time.

For a demon who are known for their evil ways and ugly heart, he is quite a rare one with such a good physique and helpful nature.

Once everyone left the room, he sat on the couch leisurely before motioning me to sit down.

"What is your deal?" He asked me coldly, and I squinted my brows.

"What do you mean?" I asked, confused.

"Well, you've got to be one of the stupidest and brave girls I have ever met. You challenge authorities all the time without even a tint of fear. Do you not fear death? How could you enter their dungeons alone just like that? I get that you were there to steal something, but you should've left immediately after doing it. But what did you do? You freed a prisoner and stood like a statue in front of another prisoner," he paused before bending towards me and looking at me observantly.

"Just what the hell did you want to do? Free all their prisoners? Were you looking for a new feud?" He asked, and I looked away, biting my lips as I remembered the sour sigh of lady Cera.

"I don't think it's any of your business," I said before looking away to prevent him from seeing my tears.

"You are seriously a character that I find really hard to understand," Alexander said, and I looked at him.

"Likewise," I said, and he smiled before standing and going towards the kitchen.

Bringing in a few plates containing food, I don't know if it was just my paranoia, but I couldn't help squinting my brows as I noticed all the dishes on the table were the ones I liked.

"Are you a vegetarian?" I asked.

"No, but you are," he said, and as if he made a slip-up, he quickly looked away, and seeing him like this, I said nothing else, but that doesn't mean I didn't add him to my list of the people I need to search.

After having dinner in silence while talking about nothing in particular, we sat in his car as he insisted on escorting me to the hotel personally.

As we were going toward the hotel, he received a phone call, and he looked at me before ending the call, making me even more curious about him.

"Why did you save me? Even risking your deal," I said, and he shrugged.

"I liked your personality from the moment I saw you. To be honest, I even had someone know about your background, which I must mention is a little strange as you are nothing like what your background describes. Not to mention how little is available about you, as if you are deliberately hiding it. Anyway, I didn't want such an interesting personality to get killed so quickly," He said, and I won't lie that I didn't like how he was honest with me about the background check and other things. I appreciated his honesty.

At least it makes sure that he doesn't harbor any ill intentions towards me, or that's what I think.
