

Chapter 406

She turned her head to him. "You will take me to another pack?"

"Yeah. If you agree with me, then."

She was about to say yes. Then she had the epiphany that her parents would never give their consent for her to wander off without them.

"What happened?" He asked when he saw her upset face.

"No, I can't."

"Why? You don't believe in me, do you?"

It was his question that gave her pause. How ready and willing she was to answer yes. It turned out that she had genuine confidence in him within her heart.

The most important thing was that she had a sense of safety in this environment when she was with him.

She was looking forward to the time she would get to spend with him.

She had never thought that Ryan would make her feel like this.

"Your silence is giving me an answer."

She avoided his inquiry and said,

"My parents will never give me permission to go outside of this pack because of my rank."

"You are my Omega. Who will dare to touch you? I will bury them alive."

His unexpected words mirrored what she was feeling deep down inside. Her inner wolf let forth a low growl.

She couldn't take her eyes off his wise features. He appeared grave as if he were getting ready to kill everybody who crossed his path.

She flushed and blinked her eyes several times. She turned away from him and looked away.

'His Omega?' She repeated his words in her heart. It sounded very intimate.

He grabbed hold of her waist and dragged her in his direction. The surface of the car was slippery, so she went quickly to grab hold of him by the pull.

"From now on, you are under my protection. Just tell me if you feel something is wrong with anyone. I will punish them in my way. No one is allowed to touch my baby."

His face was in close proximity to hers. She could feel his warmth emanating from him. She took her time looking at his features.

"When did we become this close?" She asked herself.

"Do you get it?" He inquired.

She gave a slight shake in response.

"No."

"What?"

"Do you even know how to fight? How will you protect me if someone tries to attack me in wolf form?" She asked in a playful manner.

However, a shadow appeared in his eyes.

His hold became increasingly firm. "You think all of my life I have been only roaming around girls, right?"

She immediately shook her head. She thought he was hurt by her words.

She rested her hands on his shoulder. "I didn't mean to say that."

"Well, that's fine with me if that's what you think. I am not the type of person to convince you to change your opinion. I have mentioned it to you before."

After he disengaged his hold on her waist and climbed down from the car, he walked to the door of the car.

She had a fixed gaze on him. She also lowered herself to the ground and questioned,

"Did I make you angry?"

"No, let's go. I will drop you home before sunrise."

He then opened the door and got inside. She followed him and went to sit beside him in the passenger seat.

She buckled the seatbelt and glanced at him.

"I didn't mean to hurt you." She mumbled.

"Hmm."

He turned the key in the ignition and drove off in the direction of Allison's house.

The whole car ride was silent. He started smoking a cigarette before lowering the window next to him. He smoked and drove the car together.

She wanted to stop him, but she realized that he was already mad at her and so she refrained from doing so.

She could not help but keep looking at him.

'Why did he take it to his heart? He never attended any training, which is why it hurt his ego. I should not have said that. How come I always end up talking much too much? It was my fault for not keeping my lips shut.' She kept scolding herself in her head.

"I am sorry."

While lowering her head, she whispered. She fixed her gaze down on her lap.

She thought he would not hear her, but he heard her clearly.

"Why?" He asked the reason for her apology.

"You came to meet me directly, and throughout our conversation I said something that ruined your mood. I am sorry for upsetting you."

"You don't have to apologize. I am not upset. I just learned your thoughts about me."

What he was thinking was wrong. She did not want to humiliate him. She knew he had misunderstood her. Though he had reasons for that. Because his father always talked about these things with him. So he thought she was mocking him.

Allison did not want any misunderstandings between them.

Therefore, she confronted him with her words,

"No. I apologize if I offended you in any way. It was merely a lighthearted comment that slipped out of my mouth. I only meant it as a joke, but you took it too seriously."

The car came to a halt in front of Allison's house. She did not take her gaze off him as she waited to hear him out.

He smashed the bud of the cigarette in the ashtray that had been placed on the car.

He turned to her and looked into her eyes.

"I want you to know one thing very clearly."

"Yes?"

"I did not want to come back here. But I returned for you. I want to be with you. I want you to feel the same way I feel for you." He leaned toward her as he spoke.

The moment he got nearer to her, she could feel a fluttering in her chest caused by her beating heart.

Due to his breaths brushing her face, she was unable to concentrate on what he was saying. Her cheeks flushed with redness.

He cupped her cheek and said,

"Allison, be mine. I will grant you what you deserve. I will give you every pleasure that you have never thought of."

She closed her eyes and focused on the sensation of his touch and his words without giving him a response.

He tilted his head and kissed her cheek, then confessed to her.

"I really like you, Allison."