

Chapter 364 Hope He Was Not Tough On You

"I apologize," Josiah uttered remorsefully.

Judging by Amara's evident animosity toward Isaac, Camila surmised that Isaac had made Josiah's life difficult.

Otherwise, Amara wouldn't harbor such intense animosity toward Isaac.

She was well aware of Isaac's character and remarked, "Forget about it. I understand that he gets to be a pain in the ass."

Amara, who had just entered the room carrying water, overheard Camila's words and responded, "It goes beyond just being a pain in the ass..."

"Amara," Josiah interjected.

Reluctantly, Amara fell silent and handed the water to Camila, saying, "Have some water."

Unbeknownst to her, it was actually Camila who had led to Josiah's arrest by Isaac. If Amara had known, she likely wouldn't have allowed Camila in or offered her water to drink!

Josiah usually refrained from sharing his work matters with his wife.

It was better for her not to know about the things that happened to Camila.

He didn't want his wife to know that.

They could do her more harm than good.

Amara was not a malicious person.

She simply couldn't bear to witness someone bullying her husband.

She also felt sympathy for him.

That was the reason for her behavior.

"What is your name?" Amara asked Camila.

Camila smiled and replied, "Camila Haynes. You can call me Mila."

As she spoke, Camila nervously brushed her hair, fearing that Amara could catch sight of her scars and become frightened.

"Mila, what is your relationship with Isaac?" Before Camila could respond, Amara interjected, "You should keep your distance from him. He's not a good person. He forced my husband into early retirement and falsely accused him of causing death due to negligence, tarnishing his reputation."

"Amara, I need to have a conversation with Dr. Haynes. Can you give us a moment?"

Josiah interrupted his wife once again.

Amara stood up and said, "Alright, I'll leave you two to talk."

She exited the room and closed the door behind her.

Josiah let out a sigh, saying, "I apologize for her. She tends to be quite talkative..."

"Why didn't you tell me?" Camila felt guilt wash over her on hearing Amara's words.

She realized that it was because of her that Josiah had faced retaliation from Isaac.

She felt uneasy about it.

Josiah smiled and said, "Hey, retirement was inevitable for me."

"But your career should have ended on a more satisfying note..." she remarked.

"None of that matters," Josiah responded. "As long as you're not angry with me, it's all good."

After pondering for a moment, he decided to confide in her, saying, "Isaac threatened me using my wife and child as leverage. I had no choice..."

"I understand. I know the kind of person Isaac is," Camila assured him.

"I don't know how he got wind of something and discovered that the body wasn't yours, which made him come for me." Josiah still felt that he couldn't have pulled it off more perfectly.

He couldn't fathom how Isaac had found out.

Though Camila couldn't comprehend it before, it was no longer relevant in the present moment.

She pulled out a stack of research materials from her bag and handed them to Josiah.

"These are research data on total artificial heart. I believe they could be immensely helpful for those conducting this research in our country, but I'm uncertain about who to give them to."

Josiah looked at her in surprise. "Shouldn't these be presented at the seminar?"

Camila chuckled sarcastically. "Boundaries exist everywhere, even in matters of life."

Josiah immediately grasped her meaning.

"Leave it to me," he said.

"I trust you with it. I hope it can bring about a more proactive healthcare system in our country."

Josiah gazed at her, filled with admiration in his eyes. "I was right about you."

He was genuinely impressed.

Impressed by Camila's abilities and vision.

She had exceeded his expectations.

It seemed she possessed courage beyond her years.

"These materials were obtained without permission, so I need to hurry back to the hotel as soon as possible," Camila said.

Josiah nodded. "Then be careful."

Camila assured him that she would.

As she rose and walked toward the bedroom door, Josiah called out to her, "Did Isaac give you any trouble?"

Camila turned around, wondering why Josiah would ask such a question.

Josiah continued, "I told Isaac that you had left him for another man and that your child was someone else's..." He quickly clarified, "I did it solely to provoke him at the time. He had done me a great disservice."

However, Camila didn't grow angry.

She smiled and said, "No."

She comforted him, saying, "Well done. His temper deserves a lesson."

Josiah sighed. "It wasn't until I returned that I realized if he truly believed it, it would hurt you."

"I'm fine. Get some rest. I must go now."

Amara eagerly escorted her out.

When Camila opened the door, she found Isaac standing right there!
