

Chapter 482 An Accident

Before Hana could finish her words, Forrest interrupted her, saying, "Mom, what are you talking about?"

He was irritated, adding, "How could you doubt her after everything she's been through? I didn't hold a grudge against you for what happened in the past. If it weren't for her memory loss, we might never have had a chance to be back together. How can you still harbor doubts?"

Hana stared at her son and responded, "I didn't mean to doubt her, but the timing of everything was too coincidental..."

"The fire has been investigated. It was an electrical issue. It was an accident. How can you suspect her?" Forrest expressed his dissatisfaction.

Deep down, he felt indebted to Laura.

He wanted to make up for it!

If he continued to doubt her at this point, what kind of person would he be?

Hearing this, Laura abruptly turned around and walked away from the ward.

Her face displayed no emotions.

Her heart remained unchanged despite Forrest's defense of her.

Inside the ward.

Hana realized that her words were unconvincing and that Forrest wouldn't believe her. She compromised, saying, "Let's just forget I said anything."

However, the suspicion lingered in her heart. She resolved to secretly investigate Laura.

Forrest contained his anger, and now he tried to calm down. Speaking in a softer tone, he persuaded, "Mom, I truly love Laura. I don't want to lose her. Do not overthink things."

Hana remained silent.

But as she looked at her son, her gaze became more profound.

Sitting beside her, Forrest didn't say anything. When Laura returned, he took the apples she had bought, placed them on the table, and then walked out with her.

Sensing his unhappiness, Laura deliberately asked, "What's wrong? You seem unhappy."

"My arm is hurting" Forrest replied.

"I'll call the doctor."

"No need. As long as you're here with me, I'll be fine."

As Forrest turned to look at her, a smile appeared on his face. "I feel fortunate that you came back to me."

Laura pursed her lips and remained silent.

Ten days later, Forrest was discharged from the hospital and made a special visit to see Camila.

Camila had just returned from the hospital. She cradled her youngson in her arms while observing Joe playing with building blocks on the carpet. The scene was heartwarming, and it made Forrest feel a pang of envy.

"Hasn't Isaac returned yet?" He sat on the sofa and asked.

"No, he has a lot of work to attend to."

After contemplating for a moment, Forrest continued, "The investigation results came out. It was determined to be an accident."

"I see," Camila replied, her gaze lowered.

"Do you also suspect that Laura might be the one who did it?"

Forrest wasn't naive.

He could deduce such possibilities

After all, his mother had raised this question as well.

His mother had doubts about Laura, but he believed that her judgment of Laura was still influenced by prejudice.

He refused to believe it.

However, being a close friend of Laura, Camila's suspicion made him consider the possibility that something might be amiss with Laura.

"I just feel that she has changed a little."

Camila evaded a direct answer to the question.

Forrest fixed his gaze on Camila and asserted, "You are Laura's best friend. Even though she has lost her memory, I hope you can continue treating her the same way. She is still Laura. Don't let any other thoughts cloud your judgment. Even if her character might be different now, it's because of her memory loss."

"I understand." Camila nodded in agreement.

"I have something else to attend to, so I must go now." Forrest stood up.

Camila remained seated and replied, "Then I won't see you off."

Forrest assured her that it wasn't necessary and patted Joe's head before making his way out.

Initially, he had planned to drive to the company, but after pondering for a while, he decided to visit Laura first upon his return.

However, when he arrived, he saw Laura standing at the door with Aldrin.

Perhaps Aldrin had come to see her!

Forrest halted his car and strode over.
