

Chapter 488 Heirlooms

"We represent the insurance firm. Mr. Johnston instructed us to deliver these items here," the man who stood at the front announced.

Glenda, initially taken aback by their imposing presence, relaxed once she realized they weren't harmful and said, "Please, come in."

Upon hearing this, Camila looked up.

The man placed two suitcases on the table and opened them. "You are Miss Haynes, correct? Please inspect the contents."

"What's inside?" Camila asked.

"Take a look for yourself."

The man moved one of the suitcases closer to her.

Camila observed the items inside.

She was stunned.

Although she wasn't knowledgeable about jewelry, she could tell that this set was valuable.

The man continued, "This jewelry set was purchased by Mr. Johnston at an auction for 3.8 million dollars. It's an antique diamond jewelry piece, once owned by the royal family of Yamari. Our company has been tasked with delivering it to you."

Camila didn't know much about jewelry, but upon hearing the price, she couldn't help but regard it a diamond heirloom of great significance.

But she had two sons, and in the future, they would each have a wife. Who should she pass this jewelry set down to?

It was so annoying to think about it.

However, she maintained a smile on her face.

She appreciated beautiful things, after all.

The jewelry set was undeniably exquisite.

"This necklace features pigeon blood rubies, ranging from 1.27 to 5.38 carats in weight."

There were twenty-six oval rubies, each adorned with clusters of pear-shaped white diamonds. The arrangement of diamonds and rubies resembled a flower, making the necklace look like a garland.

There was also a pair of matching earrings.

"There was supposed to be a bracelet, but it seems someone has kept it, so the set is not complete."

Camila nodded in understanding.

"And what's in the second suitcase?"

The man opened it.

There was a crown in it. At a glance, Camila knew that it was as expensive as the necklace.

Coincidentally, she would have two future daughters-in-law.

If Isaac were to find out that she was already contemplating how to distribute the jewelry to her two future daughters-in-law, he would likely be unhappy.

"Is that so?"

Inside the leather box that housed the crown, there was an emerald bracelet.

On the black velvet, the bracelet shone in green hues.

"Yes," the man confirmed.

"Thank you very much," Camila said, nodding her head.

"It's our job."

After Glenda saw the insurance company representatives off, Camila closed the box and went to the study, placing it on the table for the time being

Then, she headed upstairs.

The room decorations were nearly complete.

Camila's happiness truly blossomed when she saw the wedding decorations in the room.

"Are you happy?" Annis asked.

"Yes, I'm really happy!" Camila smiled and replied.

How could she be anything but joyful when she was about to marry the person she loved?

"You seem really happy now." Annis beamed.

Laura remained quiet, merely placing the decorations on the table.

"Thank you both. The fruits are ready now," Camila said.

"We're almost finished here. I should head back."

"Why don't you join us for dinner?"

Camila tried to invite them to have dinner together.

"I have other matters to attend to," Laura declined.

She maintained a cold demeanor towards Camila.

Camila couldn't help but notice Laura's frosty attitude, but since Laura herself had forgotten their past, she didn't dwell on it.

Seeing Laura depart, Annis also felt it was time to leave. Although she got along well with Camila, Isaac had a temper she preferred to avoid. So she said, "I should be on my way too."

Consequently, Camila personally escorted them to the door.

When they arrived at the door, a car just stopped there.

Isaac got out of the car.

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

