

242 A visit

Over the next few minutes, a desperate fight for placement took place between the participants, each doing their best to survive and knock their opponents out of the match. The only one who was fighting as if nothing mattered was Apollo. 1

He was a five ray great wizard and his healing spells made him practically immortal. If he hadn't been eliminated in just one attack, nothing would have happened to him. Dozens of spells fell everywhere.

The match lasted about another hour, with a fierce and competitive battle between the participants. Apolo got second place with 4 eliminations and it was very close that he didn't lose in the end. But, like it or not, those with five rays were on another level.

"I give up", Apollo raised his hand and was removed from the arena, leaving only Kayden on a glass platform that didn't even suffer a scratch from all the spells. The silence lasted for a few seconds, this was an unusual situation.

"Congratulations to contestant Kayden Heart for winning the legendary technique and the title of humanity's greatest child genius," dozens of fireworks went off from the Sun Kingdom as soon as the penny dropped.

During everyone's stupor and joy, Kayden was lifted by a crowd of people from the Sun Kingdom. The current king announced a three-day party in which everything would be made available by the kingdom throughout the territory.

The festive atmosphere made people lose the subconscious fear they had developed against Kayden during these days. While everyone was partying and socializing, Kayden only thought of one sentence.

'I failed'

A week later, Kayden's life changed a few folds. First, he now had two bodyguards at his side every second. Azir was not afraid of any attack against Kayden, because Eden perfectly controlled all those capable of accomplishing this feat and everyone knew that Kayden would be needed by humanity in the future.

His family began the integration process with the Brriten family and many things appeared for Kayden to decide and arrange. He practically only had a few hours to train and cultivate, he didn't get bored as he knew this was something necessary.

Especially now, with dozens of offers and requests for cooperation appearing to him, Kayden only accepted those that could give him some greater influence or anything like that, but he refused to waste his time just for money.

Furthermore, the spy society that has always provided information to him asked for a favor that would pay off all their debts and put them on equal footing, eliminating the previous contract that Kayden had. He just had to organize a meeting between the Kingdom of Jarvan and the organization, it wasn't difficult, he just asked Azir to help him.

The spy society was just looking for a reason to exchange the contract they had without losing too much. They knew they were strong, but they would still be easily wiped off the face of the earth if any power in the fifth realm so desired.

The technique that Kayden received was also ridiculously strong. It worked based on camouflaging its existence to the person's mana sense and covering their vision with a bright light that would prevent them from seeing a few kilometers around them and while he was blind the true technique was done, using the mana Kayden would have to force your body to be launched like a cannonball.

The technique warned that, regardless of the kingdom, it would result in some broken bones, and several fractures, as the force of the launch would cause the sound barrier to be broken and the friction with the environment would consume his protective bubble until he stopped.

The technique let him jump a few kilometers in just a few seconds and then taught him how to become invisible to any spiritual sense, it also had a specific part on how to enter the ground and move around it.

It was practically a perfect thief's manual for getting away after a big robbery, Kayden put it first on her priority list as soon as her life calmed down a bit.

Something Kayden purchased at the cost of a few hundred billion was a knowledge-devouring book. It worked based on eating other books and absorbing their pages, it was almost like a giant storage the size of an ordinary book.

His investment in this artifact was the largest amount he had spent in years, but it was necessary, this would prevent him from filling his space ring easily, following the note's advice he accumulated thousands and thousands of books on various subjects, from banal subjects how to grow food to elemental techniques from other elements.

Today, he would do something he never imagined, Heimer asked him to introduce David to him.

David developed several theories and studied animals in depth during these years with the funding he got, he single-handedly developed a completely new area of study and made the relevance of beast summoners and controllers begin to gradually increase.

Even with his income increasing thousands of times, David was still living in the same strange house with a square base and a round roof, Kayden and David were at the entrance to the road that led to the scientist's house.

The path was paved and several houses stood around David's, Kayden knew they were his apprentices and friends. Furthermore, some spaces with animals living could be seen, nothing was organized in an orderly manner and there were gigantic cages next to normal houses.

Heimer looked nervous next to Kayden, but he just thought it was normal when meeting a new environment and new people, after the feeling of nostalgia passed through Kayden, he started walking up the street.

"There doesn't seem to be anyone here," Kayden commented to Heimer.

"Maybe they left on David's orders to carry out some task", Heimer replied hurriedly and did not make eye contact with Kayden, in a few minutes they were facing the scientist's house.
