

Chapter 1911 The Bodyguard Lost Control

The smug look on Curtis's face didn't last long.

The situation changed suddenly.

Trevor moved too quickly for many eyes to see as he threw the mysterious bodyguard to the side of the guest seat.

Pain engulfed the mysterious bodyguard, throwing him into a mindless rage.

He screamed out in anger and pain.

Then he lost control and went on a rampage in the banquet hall. He knocked over and destroyed furniture and decorations. He even knocked several businessmen to the floor.

Curtis, in a panic, ordered his other bodyguard to restrain him.

"Hurry up! Restrain him. Do not let him cause further trouble in the hall!"

The bodyguards were reluctant to approach the rampaging, mysterious bodyguard. However, they had to obey Curtis's order.

Not surprisingly, the bodyguards were all knocked unconscious.

Curtis watched in despair. He was afraid that he would be next, so he found a place to hide.

He was no longer interested in defeating Trevor. All he wanted was to escape the mysterious bodyguard's onslaught.

The crowd was in disarray. Everybody was running and dodging flying objects.

"Mr. Craig, why did your bodyguard disobey you? Why didn't you let us know that the drug would make people lose their minds?"

Trevor, however, engaged the mysterious bodyguard in a fight.

The last time, they had been on a plane, so the mysterious bodyguard couldn't fully utilize his strength.

However, now there was no such restraint, and he was going full force as he charged towards Trevor.

However, to Trevor, he was nothing more than a sandbag.

Trevor leapt out of his way before aiming a kick at his private part, knocking him to the floor.

Trevor then turned to Curtis and said, "Is this a product of your new company? You dare publicize such an unreliable product?"

The other businessmen echoed Trevor. They had all lost faith in the medicine.

The look on Curtis face was a mixture of shock and anger. How could Trevor have defeated the bodyguard, who had lost control and was mowing everybody down? He was angry that his reputation had been ruined.

Trying his best to save face, he said to Trevor, "Defeating my bodyguard means nothing. There are many powerful bodyguards in my family. We are still much better than you, regardless of this slight issue. You do not meet the qualifications to attend the banquet."

Seeing Curtis's continued arrogance, Trevor said, "Ever so arrogant. You've injured many people and put the rest of bodyguards in danger. I should beat you up."

Curtis's face was twisted in anger, but he kept his mouth shut because he couldn't risk angering Trevor.

Ewing arrived at the scene in a wheelchair.

He was unaware of what had happened, and he greeted Trevor warmly.

"Where are you going, Trevor? Is the party over so soon? It seems I'm late. I have planned to entertain you."

Trevor stopped and said indifferently, "No. It's just that I'm not welcome here. I think I'll take my leave now."

Trevor then took Luisa's hand and attempted to walk out.

Ewing was shocked at Trevor's words.

"Who dares drive you away? You are a guest of my family! I'll get to the bottom of this. Come with me."

Trevor, however, ignored Ewing and walked towards the exit with Luisa.

When the businessmen heard that Trevor was a distinguished guest of the Craig family, they began to talk amongst themselves.

"He was their guest, yet they treated him this way. How disrespectful the Craig family is."

Curtis was at his wit's end. He wanted to explain but didn't know what to say. All he did was stare resentfully at Trevor.

The businessmen were all disappointed at the scene that had just taken place. They all wanted nothing to do with the Craig family.

The businessmen who had been knocked to the floor struggled to their feet and angrily berated Curtis.

"Your bodyguard injured me. What are you going to do about that?"

Curtis was resentful.

He hadn't expected his bodyguard to lose control and for him to be left to deal with the aftermath.

This was all Raven's fault. He would make sure Raven paid for this.
