

Chapter 1919 Severe Amnesia

Trevor had completely let Curtis slip away.

His attention was consumed by Luisa who had fainted once more.

When Luisa roused, a familiar blankness clouded her eyes.

True to the pattern, another fragment of her memory was missing.

This time around, she only remembered a past incident at the Dreles villa.

Gone were her memories of Raven whose true identity was Trevor.

She withdrew her hand from Trevor's grasp, eyes clouded with suspicion.

"Who are you? And where is this place?" she questioned.

A pang of anguish welled within Trevor as he endeavored to jog her memory.

"You're in the Archers' mansion in Clouauro," he began gently.

"Luisa, someone drugged you. The side effect of that drug is memory loss. I brought you here to find a cure."

Attempting to piece things together, Luisa took a moment to process the information.

Trevor's heart raced, fearing the day when she'd no longer recognize him.

In his desperation, he reached out to Madison, his voice laced with urgency.

"Madison, is there a remedy? Luisa's condition worsens daily. If this continues, she might forget everyone soon!"

Madison paused, choosing her words with care, not wanting to further wound Trevor.

"The files mention an advanced drug, but Luisa ingested the initial formulation. Treating her remains a challenge. I've dispatched an antidote to slow her symptoms. It should be with you soon."

A mix of relief and despair gripped Trevor. He mumbled his gratitude and ended the call.

His thoughts shifted to the Craig family's pharmaceutical lab.

Perhaps the answers for Luisa's recovery lay there.

Braden approached, his countenance mirroring Trevor's worry.

"Can you believe Curtis had the audacity to challenge the Archers? He must have a strategy against us. We might be treading on thin ice."

Taking a moment, Trevor advised, "First, evaluate your company's financial standings. You might unearth some insights."

Braden seemed to mull over the idea, then added, "Jeffry has a sharper mind for business. I'll have him delve into it. This might be the right moment for him to get familiar with the family enterprise and step into his inheritance."

Acknowledging the sentiment, Trevor added, "That's sensible. I'll be at Kaden's tomorrow to tend to his father, so I can't accompany Jeffry. Be careful when I'm not around. Curtis might stir up some trouble here again."

Braden's acknowledgment was evident, though the weight of concern remained palpable.

He was acutely aware that the storm brewing between the Archer and Craig families would soon culminate in a turbulent showdown.

Meanwhile, Curtis, with his tail between his legs, made his way back to his family abode, preparing to recount the recent events to the Craig family patriarch.

Anticipation of his reaction had Curtis on tenterhooks.

To Curtis's dismay, the patriarch couldn't fathom Ethan's defeat. His voice was frigid as he reprimanded, "You had only one task but you can't even get it done. In Clouauro, Ethan remains unparalleled. Your impulsive leadership surely caused this setback!"

Curtis was at a loss for words.

His hasty decisions not only compromised the mission but intensified the situation.

Yet, admitting that openly was out of question.

◀ Chapter 1919 Severe Amnesia

🎁 +120 Points at most

The air grew colder as Curtis sensed the patriarch's intention to strip him of his managerial duties. In a last-ditch effort, he blurted, "There's another way to set things right! The man privy to our pharmaceutical company's intel goes by Raven. He's deeply smitten with Luisa, who, thanks to our experimental drug, grapples with memory loss. We can use her as bait to bring Raven to his knees."

Hidden beneath Curtis's strategy was a personal agenda.

Luisa's allure hadn't eluded him during their encounter in Dreles. This situation might just be the perfect ruse to further his own desires.

The Craig patriarch's face remained impassive. After a tense moment, he responded, "This will be your final shot. Fail again, and you'll be rendered obsolete in our operations."

Limited-time gift: Over 40% extra 🔥

Check