

Chapter 1931 Self-Mutilation Of One Arm

When Luisa saw Trevor raise the dagger up as if he was truly about to mutilate his arm to save her, she screamed at the top of her voice, "No! Don't do this for me!"

Despite her words, Luisa didn't truly believe that Trevor would go through with it and actually cripple his arm for her.

Trevor's hand froze mid-air, but the assassin started threatening him again. "Why are you just standing there? Do you want to see her hand ruined?"

To emphasize his point, the assassin moved the gun to Luisa's arm, his finger resting lightly on the trigger.

Trevor stared at the assassin with unwavering eyes and clenched his jaw.

He took one deep breath and brought the dagger down, stabbing ruthlessly into his left arm.

Blood splattered everywhere.

Though he managed to hold in his scream, the intense pain made his face twitch and his fingers curled in agony.

He took a few deep, slow breaths through the pain and asked in a low voice, "Can you let her go now?"

Luisa felt her mind go blank. Hot tears streamed down her cheeks without her realizing it.

She had seen it, but she simply couldn't believe that Trevor had actually gone through with crippling his own arm for her!

From that very moment, Luisa started believing that Trevor was really doing this for her own good.

The sight of the blood dripping down Trevor's arm and his occasional grimace of pain brought a wide smile to the assassin's face.

From that very moment, Luisa started believing that Trevor was really doing this for her own good.

The sight of the blood dripping down Trevor's arm and his occasional grimace of pain brought a wide smile to the assassin's face.

He laughed heartily and jeered, "Ha-ha-ha, you're really naive! You've risen to the position of vice leader, yet you still trust other people easily. Do you think you will still be able to defeat me with only one functioning arm? You're doomed today! I'll take your corpse and Luisa back to Lone Wolf!"

In reality, the assassin never had any intention of letting Trevor and Luisa go!

Now that Trevor was weakened and in pain, the assassin relaxed his guard and lazily turned his gun on Trevor.

In that split second when the assassin forgot about her, Luisa gathered her courage. Thanks to the drug, her speed and strength were triple what they ordinarily should have been.

She delivered a powerful kick to the assassin's wrist, and his gun was sent flying. The assassin yelped in pain.

Trevor saw his advantage and took it. He willfully ignored the excruciating pain in his left arm and pulled the dagger free. In the next instant, he advanced on the assassin and stabbed it straight into the assassin's heart.

Everything happened so quickly.

The assassin barely had time to register what was happening before he suddenly went deathly still. He was dead, but his wide, unseeing eyes were still in a state of shock.

Now that the crisis was averted, Trevor sat on the ground, relieved but still in pain. After a few seconds of collecting himself, he started treating his wounded arm.

Luisa watched his bleeding arm and asked with great concern, "Are you okay? Can your arm be treated? Let's hurry to the hospital!"

When Trevor saw how worried Luisa was over him, he erroneously thought she had regained her memories and hastily asked, "Luisa, have you regained all your memories? That's great!"

However, Luisa's worry stemmed from the guilt of being the cause of Trevor's injury. She shook her head awkwardly.

Trevor's joy was squashed in an instant, and he lowered his head in disappointment.

It suddenly dawned on him how dangerous Luisa's near kidnap was. Lone Wolf was definitely not going to give up so easily, especially when he got news that Lamb and his partner were dead.

"It's alright if you don't remember anything for now. There will be a day when you do. It's just that my arm is severely injured right now, and I don't have any relatives here in Clouauro. Will you please come back to the Archers' house with me?"

"You will only have to take care of me for a while, I promise. As soon as I'm fully healed, you can go and look for Cecelia," Trevor murmured softly. His main goal was to get Luisa back to the Archers' house, where she would be a lot safer.

Luisa considered his request for a while before nodding in agreement.

"Okay. After all, you are hurt because of me."

Back at the Archers' house, Luisa suddenly noticed that the message on her arm was now blurry. When she thought of how she was able to discover Curtis' duplicity by asking him about their relationship, she decided to ask Trevor the same question.

"What's my relationship with you, Trevor?"

Trevor was a bit surprised because he didn't expect her to ask him such a question. He smiled softly and answered, "We are engaged, of course. When we were in Zayden, I proposed to you publicly, and you accepted."

Luisa believed him even more when she heard his answer.

Just then, Trevor received a call from Madison.
