

Chapter 1945 The Construction Company's Trouble

After bidding farewell to Henrik, Trevor accompanied Luisa to a construction outsourcing company.

He had decided to initiate the renovation of the Sanderson family villa while also delving into the situation surrounding the Wright family.

It didn't take long for Trevor to reach an agreement with the business manager of the construction company regarding the renovation plan.

The business manager displayed his professionalism and conveyed politely, "Mr. Sanderson, if you have no further suggestions, let's proceed with the contract. We will commence construction within a week of the contract being executed, ensuring that you can return to your villa as soon as possible."

Trevor nodded in agreement. With the contract in his hand and the pen poised to sign, his attention was abruptly drawn to the entrance as a group of construction workers, still bearing the signs of their hard labor, filed into the reception room.

Their presence brought an air of energy and urgency to the space, contrasting sharply with the businesslike ambiance that had permeated the room moments earlier.

Trevor observed the workers, their attire, and the telltale scent of sweat, suggesting a long day's labor under the sun. Their entry into the room disrupted the otherwise quiet proceedings and left a sense of anticipation in the air.

Amidst the unfolding tension, the labor contractor's outburst resonated throughout the reception room, demanding immediate resolution to their wage issues.

His voice was tinged with anger as he insisted, "How much longer will you keep our salaries in arrears? Hand over the money immediately, or we'll stage a sit-in right here!"

The air grew increasingly charged as the workers adamantly stood their ground, displaying signs of discontent accumulated over time.

The business manager, straining to maintain his composure while casting furtive glances towards Trevor, was aware that their confrontation had become an unwelcome spectacle. He wanted to assure Trevor that such issues were uncommon and under control, avoiding any detrimental impression on their valued client.

With a tense expression, the business manager attempted to defuse the situation by emphasizing the company's commitment to settling the workers' salaries.

He responded in a stern tone, "What is the meaning of this? The company is absolutely committed to paying your wages. It might be possible that certain administrative processes haven't been completed yet. Please be patient for a while longer. Once I've concluded matters with my client, I'll inquire about your situation. You may leave the room now, and please refrain from alarming my client."

However, the labor contractor remained unyielding, his resolve underlined by his insistence. It was evident that such excuses had been provided to them in the past, and they were determined to resolve the issue promptly, holding the business manager accountable for their rightful wages. The friction in the room persisted, as both sides appeared entrenched in their positions.

The labor contractor, tears welling up in his eyes, expressed his exasperation, his voice quivering with emotion. "How many times have you fed us the same excuses? Initially, we were gullible enough to believe your words. But now, you intend to deceive us once more!"

"You've withheld an entire year's worth of wages. Many of us depend on this money to support our families. It's unacceptable that you're attempting to misappropriate the funds. Today, I'm here to seek justice for my fellow workers and myself!"

Trevor, who had been silently observing the exchange, absorbed the full scope of the situation.

His expression darkened as he retrieved the pen and responded in a cold,

< Chapter 1945 The Construction Company's T. 🎁 +120 Points at most resolute tone, "It seems that your company still has unresolved issues to address. Under these circumstances, I believe it would be inappropriate to proceed with signing the contract."

The unresolved conflict between the labor contractor and the construction company had cast a cloud over the proceedings causing Trevor to reconsider finalizing the contract.

The business manager offered Trevor a reassuring smile hurriedly. "I'll resolve this immediately. Please bear with me for a moment."

He pivoted, directing his irritation toward the labor contractor, reprimanding him sharply, "Look what you've done! Your unprofessional behavior has already cast a negative impression on the client. Leave this place now! Be off! If your actions disrupt our company's operations, you'll be held responsible for the losses, and your overdue salaries will be the least of your worries."

The callousness of the business manager's words struck a nerve with Luisa. Unable to remain silent, she questioned them with a tinge of sympathy for the workers, "Why don't you consider seeking assistance from a labor union in a situation like this?"

Luisa's genuine concern for the workers and her suggestion of involving a labor union added a layer of complexity to the unfolding scenario, potentially impacting the resolution of the wage dispute.

The labor contractor voiced his grievances with a bitter tone, a sense of helplessness evident in his eyes.

He revealed, "The labor union has been compromised; they don't have any concern for our well-being. We can't even afford a lawyer now to fight for our rights. All they want to do is siphon off the money. Please reconsider doing business with such a company."

Witnessing the situation deteriorate, the business manager became flustered, urging Trevor to proceed.

He attempted to discredit the complaints as mere rumors and anxiously pressed, "Mr. Sanderson, please don't heed the words of these instigators. It would be best for us to finalize the contract as swiftly as possible."

Trevor, his countenance unyielding, was unmoved by the business

57.9%

14:33

< Chapter 1945 The Construction Company's T. 🎁 +120 Points at most manager's persuasion. The dispute weighed heavily on the decision-making process, leaving the signing of the contract in limbo.

At that very moment, Kurt entered the room, his demeanor exuding arrogance and condescension.

He addressed Trevor with a smug tone, sneering "Well, well, it is you again. What brings you here to seek a collaboration with our company, huh? Even if you intend to sign this contract, our company has no intention of doing business with you. I refuse to engage with someone of your ilk!"

The atmosphere in the room grew palpably charged as these conflicting interests clashed head-on.

