

Chapter 1949 Playing Baseball

Duran looked uneasy, and he replied perfunctorily, "No, I don't know anyone called that. He is probably just a nobody who heard my name somewhere and decided to use it to threaten people. The fact that someone just mentioned my name isn't enough for you to assume I know the person. Don't you think so, Mr. Sanderson?"

Duran explained in a polite tone. Although his tone was calm and polite, he was actually seething with anger deep down.

He couldn't understand why Trevor meddled in his business. Did Trevor really think that because he was the young master of the Sanderson family, he could do as he pleased and no one would dare to stand up to him? He was determined to teach Trevor a lesson!

Thinking of this, a trace of hostility flashed across Duran's eyes. He quickly changed the topic and said, "Mr. Sanderson, Cecelia is sick today, so she can't come to see you. But since you came to the Wright family, you can't stay idle. I will make sure you have a good stay here. Talking of which, I've been trying my hand at baseball recently. Do you want to have a try? Let's have some fun together!"

For some reason, Luisa had the feeling that Duran's invitation hid something.

She was a little worried and her first thought was to turn down the offer.

However, Trevor's eyes flashed with excitement at Duran's proposal. He agreed without hesitation and said confidently, "Okay. Since you want us to play baseball, I can't refuse you. Let's play."

Hearing that, Duran chuckled inwardly. In his eyes, Trevor was really arrogant and stupid.

He led Trevor and Luisa to the field with a crooked smile. Looking at the baseball machine, Duran felt so contented.

He had customized this baseball machine. Thanks to the modifications he brought to it, the machine sent balls at a very high speed and the ball's trajectory was difficult to judge. Most people would be unable to hit a single ball.

Duran volunteered to catch the balls while Trevor stood in front of him with the baseball bat in hand, ready to hit the balls.

While Duran took this very seriously, Trevor didn't seem the least bit interested in this baseball game. In fact, he was quite distracted because all he was thinking about at the moment was how to get more information from Duran.

Soon, the baseball machine shot a ball.

Since Trevor was absent-minded, the baseball flew past him and Duran firmly caught it.

This gave Duran a sense of pride. Pretending to be worried about Trevor, he asked, "Mr. Sanderson, are you okay? The ball almost hit you. You didn't even wave your bat. Perhaps we should change the game, what do you think?"

Duran was actually making fun of Trevor since Trevor didn't even react when the machine shot the ball.

He hoped that by doing so, Trevor would feel humiliated and would decide to leave the Wrights' house at once.

However, to Duran's surprise, Trevor smiled and ignored him. Instead of answering Trevor raised his bat and stood in a ready stance.

Duran sneered and returned to his position.

Soon, the baseball machine shot another ball at a very high speed.

This time, Trevor was fully focused on the game. As soon as the ball was shot, his pupils shrank and he easily hit the baseball, sending it flying far away.

Duran was shocked.

As the ball went flying out of the field, he watched in complete bewilderment. He tried to comfort himself in his heart.

He thought this was just a fluke. Trevor wouldn't be able to do this a second time.

What he didn't know was that thanks to the Murray family martial arts that Trevor had learned, his eyesight, physical strength, physical coordination, and reaction speed were far better than ordinary people's. So, winning this game would be a piece of cake for Trevor.

Another ball was shot shortly afterwards, and Trevor hit it perfectly again.

At this point, Duran's face darkened.

What happened was beyond his expectations. Apparently, Trevor was good at baseball. It would be pretty hard to win Trevor.
