

Chapter 1966 Visiting The Director

On the second morning when Trevor arrived at the Construction Department of Dreles, he found Kurt in the reception area.

Kurt appeared taken aback but then confidently approached Trevor, taunting, "You've come here to establish connections, haven't you? Are you planning to make accusations against me? Forget it. Someone powerful has already informed the director about me. The director won't entertain you. You'd be wise to leave to avoid any embarrassment."

However, despite his tough act, Kurt was visibly nervous.

Since his previous appeal for help from Duran resulted in a dismissive response, he suspected he had been abandoned.

This prompted him to visit the Construction Department director early that day.

Trevor had no intention of engaging in conversation with him. With a stern expression, he raised his fist as a subtle threat.

This action caused Kurt to take a few steps back, visibly intimidated, and he fell silent.

Soon, the director of the Construction Department appeared in the reception room, and Trevor recognized him with a smile.

Observing the director's arrival, Kurt hurried forward to curry favor. He said, "Mr. Walsh, I'm Kurt from the Larson family. We met at the charity banquet last year. Do you remember me?"

However, Abram Walsh had heard about the previous day's events. He replied coldly, "I remember. What do you want?"

Kurt felt embarrassed and attempted to rectify the situation. He presented a bottle of Lafite he had prepared and handed it to Abram with respect.

"Mr. Walsh, I believe there was a misunderstanding yesterday. I hope you won't buy into the rumors of some despicable person and form a negative opinion of me."

He then discreetly revealed the money tucked in a corner of the wine package to Abram.

Abram's expression darkened, and he scrutinized Kurt and the items he brought.

Unaware of Abram's reaction, Kurt winked at Trevor, signaling to Abram that Trevor was indeed the despicable person he had described.

He continued, "Today, I've only brought this small token of respect. I'm unlike some others who visit you without even a courtesy gift. That's just impolite."

Trevor paid no heed to Kurt and greeted Abram with a warm smile. "Abram, it's been a while!"

Abram stared at Trevor for a moment but couldn't recall who he was. He assumed Trevor wanted to establish a connection and replied coldly, "Sorry, do I know you?"

Kurt scoffed and said, "So, this is how you greet Mr. Walsh? People who don't know you might think you're very close to him."

Trevor ignored Kurt's comment and said to Abram with a smile, "Well, it's been ages since we last met in Glareder. It's not surprising that you don't remember me."

Upon hearing the mention of Glareder, Abram's interest piqued and he asked quietly, "You... Are you also a member of the fraternity association?"

Kurt was taken aback.

He wondered whether there was any prior acquaintance between them.
