

Chapter 1968 New Construction Materials

When things underwent a significant twist, Kurt's complexion paled. He complained to Abram, "Mr. Walsh, this man is both violent and morally reprehensible. He doesn't merit your trust! Please reconsider. If you collaborate with a prominent construction company like us, the Larson family is willing to offer thirty million dollars for the patent."

Abram's expression quickly darkened as Kurt's words thoroughly vexed him.

With a stern countenance, Abram fixed a harsh gaze on Kurt and rebuked "Are you attempting to bribe me? I have the liberty to collaborate with whomever I choose. It's not your business! Do you think that my new materials are not on the market due to a lack of potential partners? I can partner with any company in Dreles or even the entire country if I so desire. I simply choose not to. Furthermore, I will investigate the allegations of you bribing officials from the Construction Department. Based on your current behavior, it appears quite likely to be true. Now, you can take your unsavory gift and leave!"

Kurt's face grew pale, and he began to leave, already envisioning a grim outcome.

At that moment, Trevor stepped forward, obstructing Kurt's path. He wore a sly grin and said, "Didn't you accuse me of having a vendetta against you? Well, now I'll recount the events of that day to Mr. Walsh. Your nefarious scheme can't be concealed. You and Garry bypassed official procedures, exploited the Construction Department, and intended to first demolish my villa before making it public. Am I wrong?"

Abram, upon hearing this, was incensed. Not only did he share a friendship with Trevor, but he was also an upstanding officer.

He pointed at Kurt and admonished, "You... You are acting against the law! The reputation of the Construction Department has been irreparably damaged. Go home! Wait for the summons from the court!"

Kurt, nearly in tears, pleaded, "Mr. Walsh, Duran from the Wright family is my boss. He must have contacted you. Can you please let me go for his sake?"

Abram, with a livid countenance, replied, "Humph, are you trying to intimidate me by invoking his name? Regardless of who it is, they can't shield you this time! Also, Duran didn't contact me at all!"

Kurt's last glimmer of hope shattered, and he left in desolation.

After resolving the issue, Abram sincerely said to Trevor, "I didn't get a chance to thank you for saving my life previously. This time, I have an opportunity to repay you. Rest assured, I will do my utmost to produce those new materials, but it will take some time."

Trevor waved his hand and reassured him, "Don't worry. I'm not in a hurry. As long as the materials can be manufactured. By the way, I'm curious about such a groundbreaking invention. Why not sell the patent or partner with other companies? You could make a substantial profit."

Abram took a deep breath and replied with a rueful smile, "To be honest, when the materials were first introduced, countless individuals approached me, seeking the patent for this type of material. That's also why Mobius abducted me. Releasing this new material would truly revolutionize the construction materials market. Therefore, I'm concerned about entrusting it to others. It could have significant repercussions on other related industries in the country. The nation may not be able to bear that price."

Upon hearing this, Trevor nodded approvingly and said, "I didn't expect you to have such a strong sense of patriotism!"

Abram suddenly fixed Trevor with an eager gaze and asked, "How about partnering with me?"
