

Chapter 1973 Desperate Protest

---

Hutton was left in shock, chosen as a mediator unexpectedly. He had no chance to clarify.

Kurt's demeanor turned haughty, and he threatened, "Trevor! Are you not going to settle things with me? Why the sudden change in your demeanor? Just wait and see. I'll take legal action against you and have you locked up!"

Trevor regarded Kurt as if he were a fool and said, "So you want to sue me for what? Do you have any proof that I hit you? Do you have any injuries?"

Kurt furrowed his brow, took a moment to reflect, and realized that Trevor hadn't actually engaged in a physical altercation with him.

Even though he was frightened by the digger, he remained unharmed.

He pointed at Trevor and argued, "You refrained from assaulting me because someone happened to intervene. However, you did threaten me, which caused me emotional distress. Regardless, you have still violated the law! Mr. Lyons, how many years can he be sentenced to?"

Trevor's patience wore thin. He sneered, "Do you even know why the lawyer came to see you?"

Kurt was taken aback, sensing that something was amiss.

Anxiously, he asked Hutton, "Why did you come looking for me?"

Hutton finally had a chance to speak. He produced a court summons and said gravely, "Mr. Larson, I am suing you on behalf of the Dreles Construction Department. Please appear in court as scheduled!"

Kurt's hands trembled upon hearing this. He muttered, "That was fast!"

He glared coldly at Trevor and asked, "You're responsible for all of this, aren't you?"

However, Trevor had no desire to engage with him. He instructed the construction team, "The issue is resolved. Let's commence construction!"

The foreman grinned and replied, "No problem!"

Kurt was shocked and infuriated as he watched the group of people take action.

He tried to stop them, so he shouted hoarsely, "What are you doing? Who gave you permission to destroy my home? Stop!"

But the construction team paid him no mind, proceeding with their work as usual.

Several workers approached the villa. Kurt lacked the courage to stop them, as Luisa had done. He awkwardly fled the scene.

All he could do was curse Trevor. "You're seeking vengeance against me! I will report you for sure! You're a despicable man!"

Hutton had been summoned by Abram. So he was familiar with Trevor. He cautioned Kurt, "Halting the Construction Department's work is also unlawful. Furthermore, you've been accused by the Construction Department. There's a high likelihood you'll face charges for two separate offenses."

Kurt was left stunned and powerless.

He was on the verge of tears. He collapsed to the ground helpless to prevent the destruction of his villa by the excavators.

Trevor didn't excessively demolish the villa; he followed the regulations. He even left Kurt with a sarcastic remark, "You can arrange for the holes to be filled on your own. Don't mar the beauty of your villa. Oh, and consider this digger a souvenir."

Kurt gritted his teeth and glared at Trevor, almost fainting from rage.

Trevor was content and was about to leave with the construction crew.

At that moment, he got a call from Henrik. "Trevor, we have a problem! Something has occurred at the hotel! Come here quickly!"
