Chapter 2039 The Jewelry Store

Trevor pulled out his phone and called Patrice.

She picked up quickly. "Hey, what's up, Trevor?"

In a hushed tone, Trevor asked, "Patrice, have you heard about what Mobius did to the Sanderson family?"

Patrice sounded shocked, then replied, "What? You think Mobius is behind what happened to the Sanderson family?"

Trevor explained what he had learned at the police station. Patrice speculated, "The boss of the Snake faction at my workplace might be behind it. It sounds like his handiwork. But, I've got no clue where he is. By the way, Trevor. This guy's a master of disguise. No one's ever seen his real face. If you're considering going up against him, you must be careful."

Trevor, with a hint of a smile in his voice, said, "Got it. Hey, make sure you're free for my wedding, alright? I'm marrying Luisa."

There was a pause before Patrice replied, her voice tinged with indifference, "Wow, Trevor, congrats on getting married! I'll keep looking into what you need. But, I won't be at the wedding."

Then, she hung up.

Trevor sensed Patrice was a bit down, but his mind was more occupied with Mobius, so he didn't dwell on it.

The boss of the Snake faction?

Trevor honestly couldn't recall anyone like that.

He pondered for a bit but still came up empty, so he decided to focus on his wedding preparations. He rang up Luisa and suggested they pick out wedding rings together.

The ring from his earlier proposal, though valuable, had a huge diamond that made it awkward to wear daily.

He escorted Luisa to the busiest jewelry store in Zayden to select their wedding rings.

Even though the saleswoman didn't recognize Trevor, she greeted them warmly, undeterred by their simple attire. "Welcome. I'm Serenity Loftus, at your service. Right this way, please."

Guided by Serenity, they began to choose rings.

Trevor and Luisa examined the wedding rings intently.

Just then, a well-dressed couple entered the store.

The man wore a pricey designer wear, and his companion was adorned with costly jewelry.

Scanning the store's offerings, the man's dissatisfaction was evident. He loudly demanded, "Isn't there anything here good enough for me? I want to buy something for my girlfriend. Make it special, and quick!"

Serenity, who was showing Trevor the rings, turned and immediately recognized the man.

He was Chamberlain Truman, son of Truman Construction Company's billionaire chairman in Zayden. Truman Construction Company was a giant, and Serenity, just an ordinary salesperson, couldn't afford to cross them.

The other saleswoman was in the restroom, leaving Serenity alone in the store.

Serenity quickly started, "Mr. Turman, here is the thing. About the jewelry in our store... "

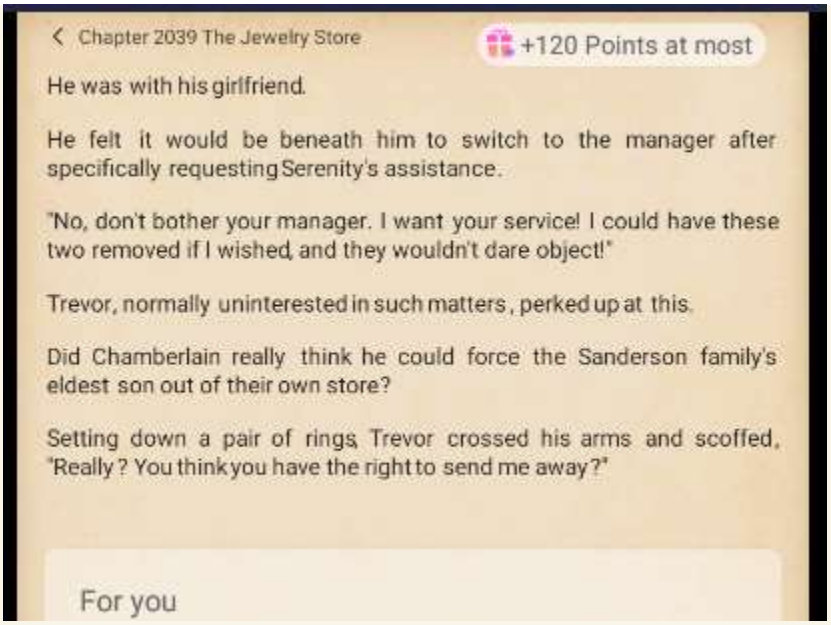

But she was cut off by Chamberlain, who said sharply, "What are you doing? Come here! I'm a top-tier member of your store. Why are you attending to someone else and not me? Is this how your store treats its members?"

Serenity found herself in a tough spot. The store's policy didn't prioritize customers based on their status. To her, every customer deserved equal respect.

After a brief pause, she responded with a polite smile, "Mr. Truman, would you like me to get the manager for you?"

Under normal circumstances, Chamberlain would have accepted this offer.

However, this time was different.

He was with his girlfriend.
He felt it would be beneath him to switch to the manager after specifically requesting Serenity's assistance.
"No, don't bother your manager. I want your service! I could have these two removed if I wished, and they wouldn't dare object!"
Trevor, normally uninterested in such matters, perked up at this.
Did Chamberlain really think he could force the Sanderson family's eldest son out of their own store?
Setting down a pair of rings, Trevor crossed his arms and scoffed, "Really? You think you have the right to send me away?"
