

100 CHAPTER 100 Because I Want You

Elsie's POV 1

"My love, hurry up, I don't want us to be late."

"Yet you were the one that dragged us back to bed this morning."

"It's not my fault, you kept looking so beautiful, what was I supposed to do?"

I laughed as I grabbed my purse from our closet and rushed to him, planting a quick kiss on his lips, I grabbed his hand and dragged him outside.

He followed grudgingly as he complained, this was our morning routine and I loved every single moment of it.

"That kiss was too quick, let me get a full one, common Elsie."

"No, we will end up late because you won't stop at just a kiss."

We had to leave our apartment thirty minutes earlier if we wanted to be at work on time and since we were both very deliberate about it. It was a joint effort.

We both established at the beginning of our official relationship together that we wouldn't let our attachment hinder us from performing our professional duties.

The best part was we got to do everything as a couple and it was the perfect fit for both of us.

It's been two months since Albie came here and he was soon appointed to play a vital role in the company's legal team. So now, he was permanently a worker and we again ended up as co-workers.

The difference now was we were staying together, permanently. Albie insisted that he wasn't satisfied with the size of my apartment so he got a bigger one but it was further from the company than my previous one.

So now we had to wake up earlier so we could make it on time. In regards to his job, he later told me that it was Mr. Larson who told him about it.

The next day after the company's anniversary party when he went to his office, he told him that my company wanted to expand its branches and needed more experienced attorneys who would be able to defend the company in case of legal crises.

Mr. Larson suggested he applied for it because he was sure with his recommendation he would be able to get it.

It made me wonder why Mr. Larson would willingly lose two well-knowledgeable and talented attorneys such as ourselves. I sit ponder to myself about it but in the end, it was to my benefit.

"Welcome Elsie." My assistant greeted me as soon as she saw me.

"Morning Vivian."

Yes, I picked another newbie under my wing, I thought hard about it before doing it because of what happened with Esme and Daniel.

There was no way I would forget what they did to me but there were plenty of raw talents that needed to be groomed, I wasn't going to let others pay for the sins of those two.

Vivian in particular was a very intelligent, smart intern, she just needed to be guided in the right way and she would blossom into a very skilled attorney.

Thinking of Esme and Daniel, I tried to remember them, the last I heard of Daniel was that he that he lost his funding for schooling aboard and went back to his parents.

Esme couldn't handle the shame of losing her first case and was terribly under the radar. It pained me to see how much I tried to impact her go to waste. Hopefully, that wouldn't be the case with Vivian.

I thank them for doing what they did, to them, they were ruining me and destroying my life but unknowingly, they were freeing me.

If not for their betrayal, I would have never been pushed to leave my company, I would have never left, and I would have never met Albie.

I mean I met him before but never met him in that sense, their betrayal opened my eyes and set me free. Free to find love, to experience it in the purest and most heart-melting way.

Soon enough it was closing time, I scribbled the last reports for the day and headed out of the office. Dropping off the reports at Vivian's desk, we said our goodbyes and I moved outside.

Before I could knock on his door, I heard his voice telling me to come in.

"How did you know I was there?"

"Because it's you, my love, I can sense you even if it's miles away."

He had a way of saying things that drove me crazy, seeing him behind that desk made him appear so powerful and majestic. It added to his appeal, I used to have trouble viewing men as above me but with Albie, I had no problem.

His masculinity was so strong and pure that it forced me to automatically submit to him, I find myself wanting to be dominated and led by him.

It was strange but I felt it and I wanted it. He smiled dangerously as he looked at me, his eyes looked me over and my body shivered at the motion.

"Why are you staring at me like that?"

"Because I want you and you know it too."

The words he spoke were igniting, I walked towards him and he pushed his chair to bring out his legs from underneath the table to the sides.

I moved closer and he opened his legs, I stepped into between them and leaned down to kiss him. The kiss was slow and intense, pulling back from him, I played with his tie as I twirled it between my thumbs.

"What are you thinking of right now? I asked him.

"Of how lucky I was to find you, I'm so darn lucky."

"Same here, I am so happy we are finally together."

He held my waist, twisted me to turn, and placed me on his lap, he kissed me from behind as he nibbled with my earlobes and I laughed in response.

Turning in his lap, I faced him and held his face, I fucking loved this man and I was willing to be with him forever.

"I'm glad you didn't give up on us," I whispered.

"Me too." He kissed me and I was lost in it.

