

One Night Stand With The Uninvited Wolf President

Chapter 264 Strange Kidnapping

He felt stunned and thought, " In other words, Swedum is currently at the Winsors!"

"Where is Ceres?"

"Have they said anything else?" Johnny asked.

Ben shook his head, "No, he said that Swedum and Dahlia wanted to play a little longer. They will send him back later."

Johnny immediately picked up his phone and called Ceres, but the phone was turned off.

He suddenly had a bad feeling.

He didn't know if it was because so many things had happened, but he was a little too sensitive. He immediately got up and handed the matter over to Ben, then drove away.

He drove back to Villa Amio, but the lights were off at home. He walked in and looked as if no one had come back.

He continued to call Ceres, but her phone was still off.

Johnny called Nyla and Alice separately, and they all said that Ceres had not contacted them.

Johnny realized that something had happened.

He immediately took out his phone to search for Ceres's location. When Ceres returned, he secretly installed a positioning system on her phone when she was not paying attention. Because he knew that Ceres was stubborn, she never said anything.

Johnny opened the GPS and found that his phone was displayed near the kindergarten.

As he drove, he called Ben and told him to immediately ask people to find Ceres.

He went to the kindergarten and found Ceres's phone in a small alley.

It seemed that something had happened to Ceres on the way she was to pick up Swedum.

It was almost nine o'clock in the evening, and about five hours had passed since that time. Five hours could do many things!

Johnny didn't even dare to think about it. He could not lose Ceres again.

But he couldn't think too much about it. The only thing he could do now was to find her quickly.

He wanted to check the surveillance cameras, but he found that the surveillance cameras here had been destroyed. Only the surveillance cameras at a crossroad not far from the kindergarten worked. However, in those five hours, so many cars had gone through. It was simply unimaginable to watch one by one.

When Ceres woke up, she found that she had been abandoned in the warehouse. There was no rope tied to her body, but she was in a daze. She sat on the ground and calmed down. She wanted to find her phone, but it was gone.

She quietly stood up and found that there was no sound in this huge warehouse at all.

It wasn't until she mustered her courage and shouted, and no one responded to her, that she realized there was no one here at all.

Ceres walked out of the warehouse. The moon outside was round and large, illuminating the entire space.

The warehouse was built in the field, and there was nothing around.

Ceres walked along the field all the way and finally arrived at a village. She originally wanted to borrow a phone to call Johnny but found that she did not remember Johnny's phone number at all.

She pounded her head and couldn't remember, so she had to give in.

So, she asked the villagers to send her to the nearby town. After tossing and turning many times, she finally got on the car.

Johnny was frantically searching. Because too much time had passed, it was too late to block off the airport, train stations, and bus stations. He could only search for clues bit by bit before chasing after people.

When Ceres returned home, Johnny was furious with his subordinates.

She had never seen Johnny, who was so furious.

When he lost his temper, she felt all the hair on her body stand up, so this was his real appearance.

He had truly endured too much for her sake.

"Johnny, don't worry. Let's think about it first. Who would kidnap sister-in-law at this time?" Bob comforted.

"Johnny, I'm back." Ceres stood at the door and said softly.

Johnny heard the voice and suddenly looked at Ceres. He rushed over and held Ceres in his arms.

Seeing that Ceres had returned safely, Bob heaved a sigh of relief. It seemed that this was a false alarm.

Bob hurriedly gave his subordinates a look, indicating everyone to go out.

"Where did you go?" Johnny reacted and began to look up and down at Ceres to see if there were any injuries on her body. "Are you alright? Are you hurt anywhere?"

"No, I've checked. I'm not injured." Ceres could not bear to see Johnny's anxious face.

"Are you really not injured? Then what happened to you?"

Ceres told Johnny everything that had happened.

Johnny also felt that it was strange. Since the other party had gone through so much trouble to kidnap her but had kidnapped her and left her in the warehouse, this was too strange!

The other party might have ulterior motives.

"Do you feel uncomfortable anywhere?" Johnny was still a little worried.

"I just have a little headache," Ceres shook her head.

"Let's go to the hospital now," Johnny said.

Although Ceres felt that there was no need to see a doctor, she still followed Johnny to the hospital to show she was okay.

When they arrived at the hospital, the doctors and nurses were ready and began to give Ceres a check-up.

Johnny made a trip to the restroom at the time.

Ceres was sleepy, tired, and hungry. She didn't dare to tell Johnny. She was worried that Johnny would be worried, too. She rolled up her sleeves and leaned against the chair when she was drawn blood. She was in a daze.

The nurse looked at her arm. There was a pinhole on it and some bruises. "Miss Ceres, this arm has already been drawn. Shall we switch the other?"

"What?" Ceres was in a daze and did not pay much attention to it, so he extended her other arm.

The nurse finished the blood sampling.

At this time, Johnny also came back, and Ceres immediately became spirited again.

"The result will only come out tomorrow." The nurse reminded.

"Alright, the inspection is done. Other than the result, the rest of the checks are fine. Can we go home now?" Ceres held Johnny's arm.

"Let's go home." Johnny stroked Ceres's little head.

"Oh right, I didn't pick up Swedum. Where is he?" she asked.

"He is at the Winsors today and has a good time with Henry's daughter. He won't be coming back tonight," he replied.

"Alright," she said.

Then they returned home together.

Although Ceres was fine, Johnny still frowned. Seeing Johnny frown, Ceres also pouted.

"I'm fine now. Don't frown anymore!" She lay on the bed and nestled in Johnny's arms.

Ceres reached out to smooth Johnny's furrowed brows.
