Chapter 791 - 791: Come On, Mom, You Like Him

If no one told you, there was no way you could tell one of the three identical beauties was, in fact, the mother of the other two, who are twins.

Queenie Lunara looked exactly the same as her daughters, Queenie and Ohema.

The only differences between them were their eye and hair colors.

Queenie's were now dark red and slowly moving toward red, thanks to her gradually awakening her Asura side, which was related to blood.

Ohema had silver-purple eyes and hair, while Queen Lunara's were dark silver.

Aside from these distinct features, they had the same face, height, and even the same body shape, down to the cup size. That was how identical they were.

In fact, while Klaus didn't know yet, the three ladies treated each other like sisters when in private, so talking with their mother was more like talking to a sister.

"What's wrong, Mom? You look upset," Queenie said when she and Nari approached Queen Lunara.

"Of course, I am upset. Couldn't you two keep it down a little? Must you scream your hearts out?" Queen Lunara said with a smirk.

She had been annoyed for a second there. Something she found bizarre, considering two ladies having sex with their man shouldn't bother her.

"We were having a good time with our man, so of course, making those sounds was our way of showing how amazing he is," Queenie replied with a cheeky smile, wrapping her hand around her mother's shoulder as if they were buddies.

She led her to the side and sat down on a stone.

"Why don't you tell me what's bothering you, Mother?" Queenie asked. "Before you say nothing's bothering you, know that I can sense the tension between you and Klaus. We all can."

"So, what's wrong? And if possible, how can we help?"

Nari nodded from the side, watching the queen turn to look at her daughter.

She could tell Queen Lunara wanted to lie, but she couldn't take that route since Queenie had already stated the obvious.

"I don't know what you're talking about." Queen Lunara, however, checked out and chose to lie. Her lie was blatant, and they could tell even she didn't believe it.

"Oh, come on, Mom. I saw how you were staring at him for the past three days, especially when he took his shirt off.

Those eyes you had on back then were of someone who wanted to rip his clothes apart and devour him," Queenie laughed, causing Nari to giggle.

"I wasn't staring." Queen Lunara didn't like where this was going.

"Stop lying, Mom. I knew you were staring because I was, too, and he's already my man. So you can understand why I believe there's something between you two. I don't know exactly what it is, so why don't you tell me?"

"Do you like our man?" Nari asked the question straightforwardly, making the queen nearly choke on her breath.

"Don't be ridiculous, Nari. Why would I like such a brat?" Queen Lunara answered Nari's question, but the two ladies didn't buy her answer.

It didn't take a genius to know something was going on in the warrior queen's mind. It was like she was having an internal struggle. Her brain and heart weren't communicating properly.

Naturally, Queenie was the best person to handle this, for she'd had her own internal battles, and when she finally accepted them, she became happy.

So she knew something had to be done. This way, her mother would have it much easier than she did. The last thing she wanted was to see her mother struggling with inner demons.

"Look, Mom, Klaus is an amazing guy. He's easy-going and perfect every day. So if he's the source of your struggle, it's better to confront him and get it out of the way.

Trust me, the faster you resolve your inner demons, the better it is for you. I learned that the hard way. So, if he's the cause of this, you should talk it out with him.

He wouldn't devour you from a mere talk, so get to know him and if possible, don't wear this cloth when you meet him. Trust me, you wouldn't want that brat seeing this thickness." Queenie giggled.

"Personally, though, I think you're falling for him, Mom. It makes me wonder about many things. I wish Ohema were here," Queenie laughed.

"Stop speaking nonsense! Who would like that brat?" Queen Lunara still wouldn't accept defeat.

"Come on, Mom, you like him. Just be ready to get devoured by him."

Queen Lunara had had enough, so she flew away before making any mistake she'd probably regret for a while.

However, when she was far enough, she stopped and placed her hand on her chest, trying to calm her wildly beating heart.

Slowly, it started to calm down.

However, images of the time she spent with Klaus after defeating the snake back in Monsterland started appearing in her mind, causing her heart to begin beating wildly again, like a drum.

"What is wrong with me?" she muttered, but she couldn't get the image of Klaus's handsome sleeping face out of her mind.

Her mind spiraled deeper into confusion.

Of course, she couldn't deny the subtle warmth that spread through her chest whenever she thought of Klaus.

His confident smile and the gentleness hidden beneath his robust exterior always make her want to look at him even more. Klaus is affecting her in ways she can't place her finger on.

She shook her head fiercely, hoping to clear her mind, yet the image stubbornly persisted.

"No, this can't be," she whispered to herself, frustration evident in her voice. "I'm Queen Lunara, the Queen of the Moonborns—I don't have time for such distractions!"

Her daughter said the same things back in Stone Valley when Nari was helping her become Klaus's woman.

"I can't get distracted. Not now"

"Plus, he isn't some random person. He is the man of both my Daughters." She muttered, already having a panic attack setting in.

Despite her protests, the memory of the time she spent with Klaus kept creeping back in.

She spent close to a month alone with him, with Klaus sleeping through the entire period. However, while the brat was asleep, she couldn't help but get absorbed in looking at his handsome face.

The more she looked at him, the more it felt like she should stay with him much longer. It felt like she would be okay and protected whenever she was with him.

Unconsciously, her lips curved into a small smile before she caught herself and blushed furiously.

She couldn't deny the truth any longer—she had indeed developed feelings for Klaus, though admitting it openly felt terrifying.

She sighed, leaning against a nearby tree, eyes closed. "Why does it have to be so complicated?" she murmured softly.

She would be lying if she said she wouldn't want to get rid of these feelings. However, a part of her couldn't deny that she shared something with Klaus, and as such, if she dared bury her feelings for him, she would forever regret it.

So for the next ten hours, she sat under the tree contemplating what she must do.

Suddenly, her sensitive ears picked up footsteps approaching, prompting her eyes to snap open sharply. Her heart raced as she immediately recognized the familiar, relaxed aura approaching her.

Chapter 792 - 792: Do You Believe in Past Lives, Because I do...

Klaus stopped beside Queen Lunara, who was panicking inside, considering he wasn't expecting Klaus to be there at that moment.

"You look disturbed," Klaus said, smiling at her.

'Of course, I looked disturbed. Why do you have to be handsome and caring?' She said inwardly, not daring to say it out loud.

"I am not disturbed. I was just startled you appeared all of a sudden when you should be sleeping," she found an answer that wasn't too obvious.

"I see. Well, I had enough sleep, so I woke up and decided to catch some fresh air. Who would have thought I would find you here?" He walked closer and sat beside her.

Naturally, this wasn't easy for the Queen, who was doing her best to keep a calm demeanour around Klaus. She wouldn't want to make it look obvious, which would defeat the whole purpose of looking nonchalant.

The queen was keeping her composure in check, and so far, it was being held by a thread. But she was holding it firm, thread or not.

However, she was dealing with Klaus, who loved nothing more than the thighs of a woman. Queen Lunara was clad in a black gown that was just too light to cover her thighs from Klaus's gaze.

Klaus most definitely wouldn't ignore something that alluring.

He lowered his head, and before the Queen could react, his head was already on her lap, causing her body to stiffen.

It was safe to say Klaus had developed the act of sleeping on the laps of ladies to the extent that he could easily do it regardless of the conditions around the woman.

He looked up and met Queen Lunara's gaze, causing him to smile.

"Are you blushing?" Klaus asked, watching her cheeks turn shades of red.

"Tsk, who is blushing, and who gave you permission to put your head on my lap?" she asked, not knowing how to react.

She had been doing her best to understand where this strange feeling she had been feeling for Klaus came from. However, just when she was making progress, this brat stepped in again and destroyed her composure.

"Do you want me to remove my head?" Klaus asked, but the Queen couldn't come up with an answer. She could only continue to stare at the brat who was smiling at her.

"Just relax. I won't eat you," Klaus said, adding, " unless you want me to." He would have licked his lips, but he wouldn't want the lady to lose her heart.

"What do you want?" Queen Lunara asked.

"You have many laps to sleep on, so why did you choose mine? Why not go to your many women?" Her tone wasn't like before; there were traces of things she couldn't figure out yet.

Klaus, who knew she was saying this just to know how his women would feel about this, smiled.

"I don't mind them ganging up on you for being a husband stealer. How can you expose your thighs like that, knowing they are my only weakness?"

His laughter echoed from the mountain, making Queenie and Nari turn and look in that direction.

"He is already awake, huh? I wonder what he is doing to Mother," Queenie said with a smile.

"It's Klaus. Right now, I am sure he has his head resting on her lap and making her wish she was never born," Nari responded, making Queenie widen her smile.

"I just hope she comes to terms with her feelings. Mother is just too stubborn sometimes, and while I love her stubbornness, this is a matter of the heart, and trust me, the two clearly share some connection.

I know you can feel it too, Nari, because I do. So it will be best if she figures that out before it's too late."

Queenie, who had already established that she and Klaus were together in their past lives, started to understand the trend.

So far, she had established the same thing between Klaus and Hanna, Lucy, Anna, Nari, and Nadia.

Now she started sensing that connection between Klaus and her mother, and that filled her with great joy.

After she recovered her memories and saw what her situation had put her mom through, she started wishing for her happiness. Knowing this could be a thing, she was both happy and hopeful for her to become Klaus's woman.

Though it's weird to share the same man with her mom, who wouldn't want to be with the most awesome warrior on Earth?

"Let's hope she becomes our sister soon, so I can call her Big Sister Luna," Nari smiled.

"We already have a Luna who is destined to be our sister, so what about Big Sister Nara?" Queenie smiled.

"Not a bad name, but I feel like we should just call her all three, depending on the space we are in. But I dibs on Big Sister Luna." The two ladies giggled and decided to wait.

On the mountain, Klaus looked at the beauty he was resting his head on and smiled.

"Tell me something, do you think we are meant to be together?" The question was simple yet deep, completely unexpected. Klaus just couldn't find a better way to ask this question.

This caused Queen Lunara's heart to race.

"Why did you ask that?" Queen Lunara asked.

"Because I feel like we are meant to be together. For some reason, I feel like I should hold you like a delicate flower and never let you go ever again. I know it's weird, but I trust my feelings and know this has a deeper meaning."

Queen Lunara could only stare at his handsome face but couldn't utter a single word. Her mind was still processing Klaus's words.

"Do you believe in past lives? Because I do..." Klaus suddenly asked, causing her beating heart to shake a little. The question was like a key turning the lock in both her heart and head.

"Where is all this coming from? I know you wouldn't be saying we were once lovers in our past life," she asked, a rare smile gracing her lips.

"That's the thing. I think you and I were lovers in our past lives. I even think we were more than that," Klaus also smiled.

"You think so?" she asked.

"Indeed. How else would I feel this way toward you if I hadn't played with this body before?" Klaus was trying to get handsy, but the Queen slapped his hand away.

He could rest his head on her lap, but he couldn't touch her butt, not just yet.

Klaus laughed, watching her cheeks turn red. She just looked too cute, and for that reason, he planned on making her understand his feelings before it was too late.

"I know we were together in our past, and I would want us to be together again. However, I also know you need to come to terms with your feelings for now.

But bear in mind that you cannot slip through my fingers, so keep that in the back of your mind while sorting out your feelings.

Also, spend more time with Lulu and Sofia. I have a feeling you three will hit it off." Klaus continued to rest his head on her lap. Soon, he was indeed asleep, probably not waking up for a while.

Queen Lunara was again left with a handsome man on her lap, and all she could do was stare at him. Of course, this time, her hands were brushing his head, and she slowly started admiring him even more.

However, she took his words to heart and knew she must start spending time with Luna and Sofia.

Klaus may not have spent much time with Sofia, the Dragon Mage, but he could sense faint traces of the feeling he was getting from Lulu and Queen Lunara, and because of that, he knew that the lady meant something to him.

Chapter 793 - 793: Evolution Through The Star Monarch Bloodline (1)

"I will be taking Tess away now, Anna," Klaus said to the little Ice Princess who had grown attached to the Ice Banshee over the past few days they spent hunting treasures in the Forbidden Zone.

Anna and Tess were now inseparable, and Klaus knew letting go wouldn't be easy for Anna, so he allowed her to spend as much time as she could with Tess.

"Gather everyone. I have something to tell them before we leave," Klaus added, making Anna nod.

"I will see you later, Tess. The next time we meet, you will be much more powerful and even more beautiful. Just take your training seriously," Anna said to the Ice Banshee, hugging her before letting go.

"I will see you later, Anna," Tess said, her voice sounding like music to the ears. Her normal speech was like music, emphasizing her nature as a Banshee but also a siren in the making.

Klaus pulled both himself and Tess into the cube, leaving Anna to take a big sigh before leaving to inform everyone of what Klaus had said.

Inside the multi-dimensional cube, Klaus appeared in a field housing three beasts and a monster.

One was the Stone Carapace Tortoise, which he had pulled to his side while in Monsterland. He had yet to offer his blood, considering he had been rather busy the past few days.

The other three were the Radiant Hound, the Crimson Crown, and the Abyss Engine (Machine Beast). Now, he and Tess had also appeared.

"Looks like you four behaved yourselves. I expected some battle to happen," Klaus said.

"We are beasts, not savage monsters," the Radiant Hound said, causing Klaus to smirk. He could tell this comment didn't sit well with the Stone Carapace Tortoise, considering it was still a monster...

"If you aren't monsters, then why were you guarding that demon spider?"

"That was because we had no choice. One day, we were forced to surrender to its cause, or we would become food. Those of us who didn't want to die obeyed and surrendered," the Radiant Hound said, causing Klaus to smirk.

Though he knew what they said might be true, he couldn't understand why these beasts were much more relatable than most humans.

Perhaps his Star Monarch bloodline was affecting him, considering he had been more like a tamer back in his 9th incarnation. Basically, he spent more time with beasts and monsters than with humans.

He seemed to understand the beasts and monsters more now, and as such, he could even sense the hurt in the Radiant Hound's voice.

"Don't worry too much about the past. I promise to make you all become the best versions of yourselves, and that is what I am going to do."

Klaus turned into his elf form and produced five drops of blood, which he immediately froze in ice.

"I will be sending you five to five direct spaces where you will consume this blood. The moment you do, your next evolution will begin.

It will last for a month or perhaps two. So relax and be prepared to handle your tribulations when you are released."

Klaus looked at the five beasts. They were also looking at him like he was prey that could be consumed. However, they could tell any attempt to attack would be the last time they drew breath.

"Any questions?" Klaus asked, but the beasts didn't ask anything.

"Since there are no questions, then see you in a month," he said, snapping his fingers. The five beasts vanished.

The five drops of blood also vanished, appearing in each of the five spaces, or more like the dimensions Klaus had created.

The Stone Carapace Tortoise appeared in a rocky region filled with tall and colossal mountain ranges that, from afar, one could tell was the perfect place for brute fighters.

The Radiant Hound appeared in a lightning garden filled with thousands of scented plants, some of which were harnessing the power of the wind.

The Radiant Hound was a creature of lightning and wind, so Klaus sent it to a rather cozy dimension.

The Crimson Crown was sent to a dimension of slaughter. Naturally, the stench of blood was abundant there. Since it had an affinity for the blood element, it was the best place for it.

As for the Abyss Machine, Klaus sent it to a dimension of magma, lava, and ice.

The dimension would benefit its body, which was basically made of different weapons. Then there was the flame element, which it harnessed through its weapons.

There was also the half-part made of ice. It was like a yin-yang dimension, only this time, instead of light and darkness, there was fire and ice, showing the disparity between the two elements.

As for Tess, he sent her to a dimension of pure ice. Her settings were full of ice, considering even her body was made of ice. So it was like sending her to the most comfortable place a person could find herself.

The multi-dimensional cube was a rather heaven-defying item with many functions. Klaus created the dimensions all from his imagination.

He had that much control over the cube, so he wasn't holding himself back. The only thing he couldn't do yet was create a realm that contained laws.

Those ones open automatically as he rises through the ranks. But this was enough to make the five beasts feel at home and start their evolution.

Currently, Klaus had two powerful beings in the Chaos and Void realms and six powerful beasts in the various dimensions he had created. The only thing left was for them to finish their evolution, and then Earth would become much safer.

After staying for a few seconds after he sent the beasts away, he left the cube and went to meet the team. They had a blast in the Forbidden Zone, but every good thing must come to an end.

The one-week relaxation was over, so they had to go back. But before going, Klaus had a few words to say and something he planned on telling those who hadn't heard him say it yet.

The battle in the Forbidden Zone had opened his eyes, and as such, he wanted to make preparations soon before his time to handle his tribulation came.

He gave himself three weeks before the last core would form, and so, he wanted to handle the most pressing matters first.

When he arrived at the meeting area, everyone was present, including War God Liu Yang and the various Grand Elders and Overlords.

Chapter 794 - 794: Evolution Through The Star Monarch Bloodline (2)

"Congratulations, everyone. Looks like you've all managed to get something from the Forbidden Zone," Klaus said to the people gathered in the meeting room.

Looking over, he can tell they each had fun and managed to acquire some valuable stuff.

"However, our stay here has come to an end. We must leave to handle the businesses we have yet to handle." They nodded, knowing that going back to Monsterland meant more missions.

"We are yet to handle the Serpent Tail Shadow Wolf, Dark Fur Flaming Panther, and the Infernal Tiger Lord. All three of these monsters are very powerful.

However, I believe we can handle them even without the help of the Overlords and the Grand Elders. However, since we are in a hurry, they will join the mission."

Klaus looked at their faces, and they nodded.

They would be lying if they said this mission wasn't the most challenging battle they've ever had since they became awakeners in this apocalyptic world.

It challenged them to push their limits, and so they would want another chance to exercise and perhaps have fun while doing it.

They know sticking around with Klaus will be a good thing for them.

"I will divide the teams into three, each handling a domain. However, before that, you all will have another couple of chances to comprehend the Luminary Diagram."

Everyone smiled, knowing that having a chance with the diagram, if successful, meant they would be breaking a limit on themselves.

They've already made some progress, and as such, they knew the next chance with the diagram would be much more beneficial to them in ways they just can't understand yet.

"But that is just by the way. The rest will be communicated when we get back to Monsterland. Now, however, plan on awakening your bloodlines after the mission.

However, the method, like I said a couple of weeks ago, has its ups and downs..."

Klaus explained the method to everyone again, emphasizing the pros and cons. Just because they would become powerful didn't mean they had to sacrifice too much.

However, after telling them everything, every last one of them accepted the offer. Even the Overlords and Grand Elders didn't bat an eye.

They weighed the pros and cons, and the pros were much better. They wouldn't be missing out on the chance to become powerful.

"Since we got that out of the way, we can leave now," Klaus declared, and they all nodded. A while later, they were on the way back to Monsterland.

The journey took four hours, but they arrived safely.

They wasted no time as they all started using their one chance to comprehend the Luminary Diagram.

The next week would see them doing that as Klaus examined them and then directly transmitted the techniques, innate bodies, physiques, and all else he thought they would benefit from, based on the stolen secrets he received from Pickle Berry.

Then, after their mission, which would finally help them determine what path was best suited for them, they would all enter seclusion and only come out after absorbing his blood.

So they worked hard and started comprehending the Luminary Diagram. Klaus allowed them to go multiple times, so within a week, they each had about five rounds, passing every last one of them.

This took their strength to a new level. Every last one of them became a force worth fearing on the battlefield.

When they were done with that, he divided the team into three. Then, he divided the 603 remaining warriors from his Paragon Force, which he is creating.

They will be the next to receive his blood after he becomes a sovereign.

He divided them into three groups, each moving with the three teams from his Elite team, Overlords, and Grand Elders.

Grand Elder Ylthia was heading the first team to face the Infernal Tiger Lord. This monster is a Human-tiger hybrid who specializes in flame magic.

Klaus had already marked it as the next monster to enter his Beast Army, so it would be captured alive.

Overlord Dharma was heading the team going after the Dark Fur Flaming Panther. That monster, too, will be the next to enter his beast's army.

Lucy, on the other hand, was leading her own team to face the Serpent Tail Shadow Wolf.

Because of the confidence they gained from the mission in No Man's Land and comprehending the Luminary Diagram five different times, the battle started in a booming mood.

Brutes like Danny and Daniel were everywhere, creating chaos and destruction.

Klaus just stood on the side, watching all three battles using his clones. He saw that they each had their priorities straight, and unlike the first time when they struggled, this battle went much more smoothly.

They each handled their opponents differently.

Even when it came to handling the Tier 10 monsters, they didn't suffer. Klaus wanted the Infernal Tiger Lord and Dark Fur Flaming Panther, and so they delivered the monsters on a silver platter.

He went ahead and offered the two monsters his blood and sent them to their own dimensions. He planned on making them evolve outside Earth, so he must leave Earth in two weeks.

The planet in mind is Mars.

The engineers from the Moon are confident that they can get him to Mars and back. Though the journey is 140 million miles, according to reports from NASA, they are confident that the prototype they are working on can get Klaus to Mars and back.

Of course, with his speed, if he got the support of a Void Stage expert, they could fly there. But that would take too long and be too taxing.

He is already aware that the heavens are waiting for him, so he wouldn't want to take that risk.

So he is counting on them to get him a spaceship. He planned on taking Queen Lunara with him, considering he couldn't leave Earth with all three Void Stage beings.

While he was gone, they would need to hold down the fort.

But he still had two weeks left to go.

After the battle, they went back to comprehending the Luminary Diagram for three more days. After three days, Klaus started transmitting the secrets to them.

Thanks to having a Once Sage Immortal as an assistant instructor, the process went very smoothly. Pickle Berry was a great help, and Klaus also did his best thanks to his many minds.

After they each received their secret techniques and other benefits, he gave them his blood. Every last one of the main elite forces, Overlords, and Grand Elders who participated in the missions received his blood.

Then, thanks to his building abilities, he created training rooms for everyone.

Thankfully, he had more than enough mastery of the Supreme Sculpting Art, so he managed to imbue more Spiritual Qi in the training rooms to speed up the process.

After he was done with the last of them, he left the Badlands and went with Queen Lunara to meet with the engineers working on the spaceship. He most certainly needed that now.

Naturally, he brought Pickle Berry with him, considering Amelia, her bestie, was in seclusion.

They first visited his mom before going, since Queen Lunara wanted to do some stuff before seeing the engineers.

Chapter 795 - 795: Meeting the Engineers

"Mom, Pickle Berry wants to spend some time with you while I am away," Klaus said, smiling at the little snake girl who clearly said nothing like that.

Pickle Berry pinched his hand, but she couldn't protest.

The only reason Klaus said that was because of the mischief Pickle Berry was cooking up with her bestie, Amelia. She clearly had something going on with the next Phoenix of Earth, but she wasn't speaking.

Klaus asked, but she kept her lips tight.

So knowing she couldn't handle another makeover from his cheerful mom, Klaus made sure she stayed with her while he and Queen Lunara went to meet the Engineers.

"I clearly said nothing like that, but I will be happy to spend some time with you, Mother," Pickle Berry said, knowing she couldn't break Klaus' mom's heart, so she accepted the offer with a heavy heart.

'I will get you, big brother. It won't be today or tomorrow, but I will get you,' Pickle Berry used the connection between her and Klaus to transmit her pain and promised revenge.

<Enjoy the time with my dear mother, Pickle Berry. I will come to pick you up when I am done with my business.>

Klaus smiled and planted a kiss on her cheek before leaving the Palace of the Moon Borns with Queen Lunara.

"You are wicked, Klaus. We both know your mother won't let her sleep until she changes her hairstyle hundreds of times," Queen Lunara said, making Klaus smile.

"She will be fine." Pickle Berry most definitely would get back at him. But he knew she wouldn't want to spend time away from his mother.

Though his mom could be mischievous sometimes, Pickle Berry and she had great chemistry, so she wouldn't make things hard on her.

"Tell me more about these Engineers," Klaus instead chose to change the topic, so he asked while boarding a vehicle that would take them to the military facility where the Engineers were working.

"They are two of the most brilliant minds in the world. And yes, the world includes Earth and the Moon. During the early days of the apocalypse, had it not been for them, we would have lost more than half the population of the Moon Borns.

They are twins, a male and a female, and while I would love to tell you what they are good at, you will have to see for yourself. The last time I tried learning about them, my mind couldn't handle it.

They are brilliant and sassy to those whose IQ is not up to standard.

Please don't give them an excuse to test your IQ. While they are brilliant, their EQ is very low, so they can't process things like emotions well. They might hurt your feelings without even knowing it.

But aside from that, they are two of the brilliant minds you'll come across."

Klaus just smiled.

"I spent a couple of weeks with three nerds, so I think I will be fine." His time with the Three Nerds back in Stone Valley taught him a lot, so he most definitely wouldn't mind spending a couple of hours or a day with these two.

The vehicle took just 15 minutes to arrive at the facility.

The moment they alighted, Klaus wanted to ask how they were able to build the colossal structure he was now standing at the entrance of.

They couldn't have possibly built that within a couple of weeks. The structure would take years to build.

"Don't be surprised. Those two created a shrinking tech that allows them to transport their lab here. It was like holding a handbag," Queen Lunara said, scanning her badge.

The gate opened for them to enter. The moment they did, everyone in sight bowed when they saw Queen Lunara. She waved them at ease and then led Klaus through the large base, where everyone was in a military uniform.

Before Klaus could even ask, Queen Lunara gave him an answer.

"Every last Moon Born is a warrior, so even the Supermarkets have uniforms. These are all specialized armors created by the engineers and designers.

We like to be alert always. You never know when danger will come knocking."

Klaus was impressed by learning these details about the Moon Borns. They were indeed capable and much more disciplined.

He saw that during the missions. He saw the difference between the Overlords and the Grand Elders. Even he saw the difference between his team and the Lycos team.

On one hand, the condition the Moon Borns found themselves in made them much more powerful and experienced than the humans.

On the other hand, their population was also limited, so they made it a must for every last Moon Born to have military training.

This was to make them competent and ready to at least be able to handle themselves during evacuations. They wouldn't want to carry extra baggage when they are evacuating for their lives.

After moving through the base for a few minutes, they arrived within a couple of meters of a large building that Klaus could tell was made from perhaps the strongest material he had ever seen.

Standing at the entrance were two young men and a woman, each sitting at the peak of the Transcendent stage.

They didn't have that warrior aura around them, but looking at them, Klaus could instinctively tell that pissing them off wouldn't end well for him.

They were clad in lab coats that Klaus knew contained more weapons than they were showing.

'They know rune magic, huh? No wonder they managed to create shrinking tech and even made such powerful armor look like a simple lab coat. These two are dangerous, perhaps the most dangerous people I've seen so far.'

Klaus was impressed. The two looked harmless, but he saw their danger, and he knew that if and when it came down to it, the twins staring at him would come in handy.

They were dangerous, incredibly dangerous.

He was also fascinated by seeing two brilliant minds, and while he didn't know where this urge was coming from, he was looking forward to talking to them.

"My Queen, we've been expecting you," the lady said, bowing slightly with her brother.

"There's no need to be polite, Anaki. I know you and Inaki would rather continue to play video games than receive me at the gate," Queen Lunara smirked and walked past them.

Klaus immediately recognized this air between them and could tell these three go way back, perhaps they had known each other long before the apocalypse.

"So you are Klaus Hanson," Anaki asked, looking at Klaus like she was scanning him.

"The one and only," Klaus said with a smile.

"They said you are a co-creator of Oracle. Care to tell me what a warrior who dropped out of high school can do creating such a next-gen AI/VR?" Inaki asked, also looking at Klaus like he was on display.

The two clearly didn't place him in their sight. Klaus could only laugh, knowing his visit would be a fun one.

Just hearing them speak was enough to tell him he indeed is in the presence of two brilliant minds. A part of him buried deep started to stir.

While he was Fruity the Combat Mage or Klaus the Weapons Overlord, he had lived many other lives.

One of his ninth incarnations was where he earned the title, The Genius Rune Master.

And as the saying goes, once a genius, always a genius.

Chapter 796 - 796: Space Bullet

"You two shouldn't disturb him. We are not here to joke around," Queen Lunara called out, knowing Anaki and Inaki wouldn't back down from wanting to know what Klaus contributed to Oracle before he became a co-creator.

Such revolutionary creation wasn't something a high school dropout, as Inaki said, could easily help create.

Of course, Klaus likely did help, but they didn't have enough information to suggest that he had what it takes to create an AI/VR system.

They also knew that for someone to become a co-creator, it meant their contribution had greatly impacted the project. So they were curious but not willing to appear that way.

However, hearing Queen Lunara's words, they decided to let the question slide. But they will certainly pick it up later.

"Welcome to our workshop. I am Anaki, and this is my twin brother, Inaki," Anaki said, extending her hand for a handshake.

Klaus took her hand, then shook her brother's too.

"Why don't we go inside first?" Inaki said, and Klaus nodded. Soon, they were inside. They appeared in a room filled with countless random symbols on whiteboards, screens, walls, and papers.

Standing inside, Klaus could only turn and scan every last piece of the symbols, finding them fascinating.

Queen Lunara, however, just sat on the side and started waiting for the twins to begin explaining why she and Klaus were there.

Anaki pulled a screen and turned it on.

A second later, a sleek spaceship shaped like a high-caliber bullet appeared on the screen. It had a smooth, polished metal surface with a mirror-like finish.

It had two wings holding the propulsion systems. Looking at the four propulsion systems, Klaus knew the spaceship would maneuver like a bird in space.

That's all he is after: to be able to get to Mars and back.

"This is the Star Bullet, the ship that will get you to Mars and back," Inaki said. "It's beautiful, isn't he?" he asked.

Klaus nodded. "Beautiful doesn't even cut it. What is this thing?"

"The Star Bullet is our baby; we've been working on it for close to twenty years. You can call it our passion project," Anaki said, tapping her brother on the shoulder.

"Then I guess I can indeed go to Mars and return." Klaus wasn't about to deny that the ship on the screen indeed had the potential to get him to Mars and back.

He doesn't know where this confidence is coming from. But deep within, a part of him could tell the ship indeed has some potential.

"Why don't we tell you what this beast is made of?" Inaki tapped his watch, and the screen changed.

"This is just a prototype, but this beast is loaded with four NovaCore-X7 engines that run on hybrid cycles and use compressed plasma fusion mixed with stellar crystal.

Basically, this bad boy is running on something akin to rocket fuel on steroids." Inaki laughed, and so did her sister.

Klaus smirked, finding the reference rather funny. Queen Lunara doesn't share their sentiment.

This was their passion project, and as such, having the chance to give it to one of the most respected warriors on Earth to test made them very happy.

"Of course, you may be wondering whether something this delicate can withstand such power. Fear not, the core of the engine is built using titanium-thermite lattice, one of the hardest yet most durable materials in the world.

We even made it so that while the engine is running, the core will start regulating its temperature until it reaches zero degrees. We've achieved twenty degrees so far, but with a few more tests, we can raise it to the desired degree.

This means that when we are done, you can fly through space with the engine at zero degrees."

"That is impressive," Klaus couldn't help but appreciate their effort. Still, those words came from a side he finds fascinating.

"However, I can't help but ask: if the core of the engine is cooled to zero degrees, what are the chances that the material used in creating it wouldn't break?"

If it's too hot, it will melt, but when it's too cold, it will break. So, how can the desired temperature be achieved while still maintaining the integrity of the material?"

The twins turned and looked at each other, clearly taken aback by Klaus's question. The brat who dropped out of school couldn't possibly ask such a question.

But they don't have time for that now. They will examine his brain later.

"The reason it wouldn't break is because although the material is made from a titanium-thermite lattice, we've coated it with layers of Aetherweave Nanoplasta, which repairs all damages in real-time.

Basically, if you don't get crushed to splat, then this ship would never stop running. The nanotech we used in this coating repairs all damages down to the core in real-time.

We've programmed them to handle every damage, whether major or minor. The goal is to achieve zero-degree cooling.

You have to know that achieving zero-degree cooling means more G-force, which means more Speed.

At this rate, even at twenty degrees, the speed is already 500,000 miles per hour. We estimated that by achieving absolute zero-degree cooling, the speed could shoot up to 1.5 million miles per hour."

"Then, with these engines, getting to Mars could take as long as twelve days, perhaps longer," Klaus scratched the back of his head.

"It has to be faster than that," he muttered.

"That is what we have achieved so far, engine-wise. However, aside from that, we also made some progress on the jump drives. We couldn't figure out how to enter the dark space channels and travel at light speed.

Well, we have yet to achieve light speed—very far from it—so we can't enter the dark space channels, which would have made this journey much shorter.

However, that also doesn't mean we haven't made progress. We managed to create a Void Drive that allows an instantaneous jump of 12 million miles every two hours.

This means every two hours, you can jump 12 million miles ahead. This is possible because we managed to harness the power of the void. So far, that is how far we can take it.

Don't worry, the hulls are lined with void plasma so that every jump won't have any effect on your body.

So, the Star Bullet can, in its current stage, take you to Mars within six to seven days, give or take," Inaki ended there, knowing that going more technical wasn't advisable.

"This is great. However, six days is still too long to get there."

Klaus turned and looked around the room, focusing on the many mathematical symbols littered everywhere, yet no math teacher could recognize them.

They would look like gibberish to many. However, the more Klaus kept staring at them, the more intrigued he felt. It felt like something he should pay attention to.

Like something he should be able to easily figure out.

All 27 minds and even the almost 28th-forming mind went into overdrive as he continued to examine the symbols.

After a few minutes of observing the symbols, he turned to the twins and asked a question that caused them to widen their eyes.

"If I can help you solve the cooling problem, can you imbue the runes into the core within the next fourteen days?"

Chapter 797 - 797: A Genius Known as Klaus

The reason Anaki and Inaki are the two most brilliant minds on Earth is because of the class they awakened when the apocalypse descended.

Runic Magic.

There are many others who have the ability to draw runes; however, they pale in comparison to these two. Their class is specifically for Rune Magic.

This meant their path to advancement is through walking the Rune Master path. However, that is where it gets technical.

They were already engineers before the apocalypse descended, so when they awakened this class, their brilliance was amplified.

Just like how the Three Nerds became even smarter, allowing them to make Oracle, Anaki, and Inaki also became much smarter. This allowed them to take their minds beyond their current understanding.

With a class like Runic Magic, they became engineering wizards. Their minds kept getting stronger, and the more they grew in their cultivation base, the more brilliant they became.

They devised the formula for creating a zero-degree core for the spaceship's propulsion systems; however, as brilliant as they were, they couldn't figure everything out, but they made some progress.

So, for Klaus to claim he would be able to help them, they became a little puzzled.

"Isn't helping us such a bold statement to make? Don't you think, Mr. Klaus?" Anaki asked in a slightly sarcastic tone.

The fact that he claimed that was just too shocking yet infuriating if one were to think about it. Klaus was just a warrior, so he had no business telling them he could help.

"I know you two won't take me seriously," Klaus shook his head.

"No offence, Klaus Hanson, but the idea that you can help us is just too shocking, don't you think?"

Rune magic requires you to know the basis, which includes knowing the symbols and how to write them. But let's say you know the symbols, you still need to understand the essence behind every symbol to be able to draw or write them.

I am not looking down on you, considering what you can do and have already done. But this is our field, and while I would want to be exuberant knowing you can help, I don't see you having the means, so stop messing with us," Inaki asked, looking smugly at Klaus.

Klaus just smiled, knowing this reaction from the twins was to be expected. But he wasn't joking, so he knew it was time for him to unleash his Nerd side.

"I know you two have already created six layers of runic diagrams. Ask me how I knew that," Klaus said, causing Anaki and Inaki to freeze in their steps.

"When I first entered this room, call it intuition or perhaps curiosity. However, I found these strange symbols fascinating.

So I started examining them. At first, they seemed like gibberish. However, as I continued to examine them, I figured out they were runic symbols.

That was when it all clicked." Klaus paused.

He most definitely wanted to have answers for his sudden knowledge of the path of rune magic, for he didn't know where all this knowledge was coming from.

Of course, he could peg it to his past self, but so far, he knew Efad, his 9th incarnation, was a formation expert. He knew this because that was what Efad wanted to be when he grew up.

His mother was a formation expert, and thanks to that, she was able to help him escape. But even if he one day became a formation expert, that didn't explain where this knowledge was coming from.

This rune magic was much more geared toward engineering, not formations. So he knew this side of him, though it was coming from his past self, wasn't Efad.

Then, if that was the case, why did he have this strange fascination with rune magic? Which of his past selves was a rune master?

The senior only said, perhaps, he was a weaponmancer in one of his many lives. But that is yet to be confirmed. Still, the signs all pointed in that direction.

"After going through the symbols, I figured they are runes, and that was when my understanding started to expand. The zero-degree cooling can be achieved. However, you will need ten more layers to achieve that."

"This..." Inaki turned and looked at her sister. The two of them were puzzled to the extent that they turned to Queen Lunara.

"He is Klaus... Even I don't understand him." She chose not to meddle with matters concerning Klaus and his many shocking qualities.

Anaki and her brother turned back to Klaus and asked, "Are you sure you can help us solve the remaining diagrams. They are much more complex than you think?"

"Of course. I just need to study all the runes that went into creating the core up to this stage, and I will handle the rest."

His confidence was oozing, and even Klaus was shocked by it. Just like how he could easily use any weapon, he seemed to be doing the same now.

And since he now had the Hivemind, he was doing more than just studying runes; he was opening a part of his past.

Anaki and Inaki nodded and pulled up every last rune they had drawn, every last rune, and handed it to Klaus, who, thanks to his Hivemind, started going through everything like he was the one who made it.

The three people in the room with him could only watch as Klaus swiped through the pages on the device he was using.

It took him close to thirteen hours to go through everything.

With every second he spent going through the pages, the more his understanding deepened.

He most certainly didn't know he was brilliant despite having the Hivemind, but his thinking changed when he was done reading the symbols.

"I don't know how much was put into this, but I have to say, you two are really brilliant. I can already see you achieving lightspeed soon enough," Klaus said with a smile.

"If you don't mind me asking, where did you study Rune Magic? I most certainly didn't expect you to know rune magic, considering your class definitely isn't for rune magic," Anaki asked, looking puzzled.

"Let's just say I have many talents, and this is one of them," Klaus responded with a smile. There was no way he would tell them he had help from his past self.

That would be a long stretch, so he decided to hide that for now.

Anaki and her brother, Inaki, sighed. They could only swallow their questions for now and ask him what had to be done first.

"First, we must focus on the first diagrams. The rest depend on the first. So we will take six steps back and expand that by including more runes. This way, when we start putting more rune diagrams into it, it will be able to hold them."

"Alright, when do we start?" Anaki asked.

"Now. It will take a couple of days, but we should be done with everything within the next fourteen days. I have to be off Earth in the next fourteen days."

The twins nodded. This is their chance to accomplish their dreams.

They led Klaus to a new room where they would be working for the next few days.

Chapter 798 - 798: Fixing The Cooling Limitations

Many will argue that Rune Magic is the same as modern-day engineering.

Of course, they both involve creating something from complex calculations and symbols. However, runes aren't just symbols; they are like alphabets that, when put together, can create something meaningful.

You can put rune symbols together to form teleportation gates.

You can also create barriers, weapons, healing arrays, and even use them to build structures (machines) that can think for themselves.

The possibilities are endless.

It all depends on the rune master's skill and understanding of the runes they use. Aside from the understanding, the application also has a part to play.

Knowing how best to put the runes together can go a long way.

Each rune has a meaning. Just like every alphabet, mathematical symbol, and computer code has a meaning, runes carry the same feel and meaning.

Some are similar in a way, while some are completely different.

In rune magic, some runes represent elements like fire, water, earth, and air. Others represent concepts like speed, strength, healing, or destruction.

When runes are combined carefully, they can create effects far greater than any single rune could achieve.

It's like writing sentences.

One word alone has meaning, but when you link many words together, you tell a story.

The same principle applies in Rune Magic. But instead of telling a story, you are telling reality what to do.

The concept of creation itself comes from runes. Reality is built using runes.

Of course, this allows one to use runes to bend reality in a way that one understands well; creating something like teleportation wouldn't be too hard.

So, runes are just a way to tell reality how to work. The core is supposed to burn hotter, but the runes will tell it to burn colder. It's all in the understanding.

This is why Rune Magic is considered so powerful and dangerous. A single mistake in the arrangement could cause the rune formation to collapse—or worse, explode.

It's not just about knowledge; it's about precision, patience, and vision. A rune master must think like an architect, a mathematician, an engineer, and an artist all at once.

Anaki and Inaki understood this better than most. They didn't just draw runes; they engineered miracles.

Their spaceship project was proof of this. They were trying to create a zero-degree propulsion system, something that would allow a spaceship to break through the limits of traditional travel.

In the past, scientists could only theorize about such a thing. But with Rune Magic, Anaki and Inaki were turning theory into reality.

Still, even with their brilliance, creating a perfect rune core was a monumental challenge. Every new layer of runes added complexity.

Every connection between symbols had to be flawless. One wrong stroke, one misplaced rune, and the entire system could fail.

That's why Klaus's ability to understand their work so quickly was shocking. It wasn't something a normal person could just "pick up."

It was as if he had spent a lifetime studying rune structures without even realizing it.

And now, standing side by side with two of the world's greatest minds, Klaus was about to help them finish building a masterpiece that could change everything.

"The first thing we need to change is, like I said, the foundation of the first diagram. That will be the building block of the entire process," Klaus said.

The twins could only nod and start to follow Klaus's lead. Klaus took a deep sigh, getting himself ready for the task.

[Just trust your instincts, brat. This is just you harnessing the experience you had from the past. Even though you don't remember yet, you've lived through it.

You drew millions of runes and perhaps even created new ones. So all those experiences are within you, just buried deep.

So tap into them, and the best way to do that is to trust your instincts and start drawing the runes. Who knows what you might come up with?]

In this aspect, the senior wouldn't be able to help him simply because he doesn't know rune magic. However, he could help him understand that this new part of him wasn't foreign.

It was him.

All the experiences he once had were a part of him. So the best way to do it was to trust himself, and as it stood now, he knew that was exactly what had to be done.

So he started.

He drew the first symbol that came to mind flawlessly.

The twins turned and looked at each other. They were taken aback, but before they could wonder anything, the second rune was done.

Then the third came, and Klaus started getting immersed in what he was doing.

A few minutes into it, a smile appeared on his face, and then he started drawing the runes with a speed both Inaki and her brother could only dream of.

'Sis, I don't know about you, but is Klaus a god? I mean, look at what he is doing,' Inaki asked her sister using a connection they shared.

'And here I thought he was just a brute like every other warrior out there. Turns out he is much more interesting. If he manages to help us, I say we become his student because I can tell he knows more than we.'

'I think so too, sis. We must take this opportunity to grow.'

One had to give it to them. Instead of getting angry or brokenhearted because a school dropout who wasn't even a rune master was drawing runes better than them, they seemed more eager to learn from him.

That showed respect and willingness to learn more.

Klaus, who was immersed in his work, didn't know he was shocking three people, though Queen Lunara wasn't showing it.

Klaus was so absorbed in what he was doing that four days passed in the blink of an eye. Anaki and Inaki remained by his side the entire time, while Queen Lunara excused herself.

She didn't understand a thing the three were working on, so she left to cultivate.

The three left in the room were lost in their work. On the fifth day, Klaus drew the last rune and let out a deep sigh.

"That is the last of them. Now, we have to arrange them," Klaus said, and the two nodded.

They had been working for the past five days to expand their knowledge, and thanks to their quick learning, they managed to pick up quite a lot.

So when Klaus drew the complex diagram, which would be the foundation for the entire process, they quickly began arranging everything.

Two days later—making it the seventh day since Klaus arrived—they completed the foundation, which was the most complex of all sixteen they would be creating.

But completing the first means the 15 left are just a matter of time. Klaus went ahead and drew the diagrams for the rest.

"I'll leave the rest to you two," Klaus said to Anaki and Inaki, causing them to nod.

"We'll be done within the next five days," Inaki said.

"Then I'll come back in six days." Klaus bid them goodbye and met up with Queen Lunara, and they left the military base.

He had fixed their limitation problem; now, it was up to them to put everything back together. His job now was to prepare for his tribulation.

Chapter 799 - 799: Rebirth of the Yin-Yang Sisters (1)

Klaus and Queen Lunara went back to the Moon Palace, where he planned to spend the next few days. And so, when they got back, he started spending time with them.

His other women, including Ohema, had entered seclusion and were currently absorbing his blood, so none of them were around, considering the process would take them four weeks to complete

So he left them in his secure fortresses.

When Klaus returned with Queen Lunara, his mom was happy to have him back, and like the caring mother she was, she started spending more time with her son.

Pickle Berry, however, was still mad at Klaus for not allowing her to go with him and Queen Lunara, but instead making her stay with his mother.

Even after three days, she wasn't talking to Klaus, which was funny considering she was always around him during the three days he had spent so far in the Moon Palace.

Now sitting under a tree, Klaus couldn't help but smile at the small pout on Pickle Berry's lips.

"You do know I will be leaving Earth for the next month, perhaps two," Klaus asked, but Pickle Berry said nothing.

"This means you won't see me for roughly two months. Will you miss me?" Klaus said again.

"Tsw, who would miss you?" Pickle Berry pouted like the spoiled child she was. Klaus tried to pat her head, but she pushed his hand away.

Klaus flashed a guilty smile.

The funny part was that despite the small snake girl holding a grudge and behaving like she didn't care, it was clear on her face that she wanted to spend all her time in the world with Klaus and his mother.

The reason she was doing all this was because of Klaus' past self, Kaden.

Back then, Kaden would always talk about his mom. He talked about how amazing she was, how brilliant a person she was, and how he wouldn't hesitate to take a second chance to spend time with her.

Naturally, after thousands of years of hearing about her, Pickle Berry became intrigued and wanted to spend time with her. Now that she had her dream fulfilled, she could only be happy—

Until Klaus made her spend all her time with his amazing yet overly obsessed hairdresser mom.

"Pickle Berry, don't mind this brute... He doesn't know how to treat ladies like delicate flowers," Klaus' mom said, fixing Klaus' hair while Pickle Berry sat beside the white-haired brat.

"Thank you, Mother. I know you are the best." Pickle Berry smiled, hearing what Klaus' mom said. Though she was pretending to be mad at him, she also wanted to be in this environment with Klaus.

"I'm sorry, Pickle Berry. I'll make it up to you." Klaus smiled. "Tell me, what do you want?" he asked.

"I want to go to Mars with you," Pickle Berry said, but Klaus shook his head.

"You're still too young for such a journey."

"You—"

"Don't worry. While I know you're capable of handling yourself, I also know that the journey isn't one you were prepared for. So relax. When everything is calm there, I'll use the connection between us to summon you.

For now, I need you to stay and take care of my women and the others who are currently in seclusion. Though they are protected for now, I need your knowledge to help them when they start awakening."

Pickle Berry wanted to argue, but hearing Klaus's words, she knew he was right. Klaus had indeed given his blood to his women, his friends, and the others, so they would need her knowledge.

"Fine, but the moment I'm done here and you're not back, I want you to bring me to your side," Pickle Berry said, and Klaus nodded.

They continued to talk for a while until suddenly, an elegant door opened and Asha walked out hurriedly.

Asha had contacted Klaus. She wanted to come out, so since he now had authority over her insect domain, he opened the door.

"Klaus, you need to come with me. Something is happening with Linx and Jinx," Asha said hurriedly.

Klaus didn't waste a second and stood up. Pickle Berry did the same, and even his mother followed suit. He knew the two would be coming with him, so he didn't protest and let them.

Before they could enter, Queen Lunara also arrived, having sensed a foreign presence in her domain. Knowing she would want to come along, Klaus gestured for her to enter.

Soon, all five entered, and the door closed behind them.

However, the moment they stepped in, Klaus sensed two powerful presences appear in the domain—one of light and one of darkness.

"Is that the power of the Void?" Pickle Berry asked.

"Yes," Queen Lunara answered, and Klaus nodded in agreement.

"Linx and Jinx are about to undergo their tribulation after consuming your blood," Asha said, walking toward the field where the tribulation would take place.

"Will the domain hold?" Klaus asked. They were now inside the insect domain, so he had to be sure.

"Yes. After I fulfilled all three requirements, my companions and I were granted the right to undergo tribulation within this domain."

Klaus nodded, and soon they arrived at the field, where the four Ant Queens under Asha were currently gazing upward.

All four—including the latest addition, Ant Queen Remy—were in their demi-beast form. Queen Remy, whose two subordinates were about to become Void Stage experts, appeared far more human than the rest.

However, it was only a matter of time before they all reached her level or surpassed it. They had yet to absorb Klaus' blood, which Asha was holding back until they all caught up to Queen Remy.

For now, they stood watching the two powerful figures floating in the air.

Linx was bathed in white light, while Jinx radiated with dark energy. It was only natural—Linx always dressed in white, while Jinx favored black.

They were the classic twin sisters.

Looking at them, Klaus could already tell—one would command the power of light, and the other, darkness.

"Hmm, who would have thought I'd one day witness this with my own eyes?" Pickle Berry said, sounding oddly cheerful as she watched the pair suspended in the air.

The tribulation hadn't descended yet, but the clouds were already gathering above them.

Klaus turned to look at Pickle Berry, intrigued by her words.

"Care to share with us what this is?" he asked, sensing some deep familiarity in the white and dark figures above. He knew there was a juicy revelation waiting.

Pickle Berry smiled—and chose to speak.

"This tribulation is known as the Yin-Yang Tribulation. It's when two beings of the same soul, likeness, and mind awaken the same innate talent, constitution, bloodline, and other aspects.

When I say 'the same,' I don't mean in the sense that they share one body, like the spider demon you killed. No—these ones are like two sides of the same coin.

The different sides are simply the nature they will become. One will embody light, and the other, darkness.

Now, this might not make much sense, but from what I know, this phenomenon has only occurred once in history.

It happened during the Primordial Era, when two powerful beings—said to be the right and left hands of the Primordial Insect Queen—awakened the Ancient Yin-Yang Bloodline and the Heavenly Body Constitution.

They were said to possess the power of Yin and Yang. One could manipulate light, but not just light. They had control over every aspect of life, creation, and anything deemed divine.

All things that have to deal with light can be understood and harnessed by them.

The other, however, held dominion over darkness, death, destruction, and everything grim. Together, they were the ultimate weapons in service of the Primordial Insect Queen.

It was said they could not die because whenever they did, they returned to the Yin-Yang cycle, where they could be resurrected.

But that's just a rumor.

However, the fact that this is happening now tells us that Earth is about to gain two extremely dangerous Void Stage experts.

But more than that, something else is going on here." Pickle Berry turned to look at Queen Lunara.

"What can you see around them?" she asked.

"It looks like there are laws surrounding them," Queen Lunara said. With her ability to perceive the Laws of the Void, she immediately recognized them.

"They are the Laws of Life and Death. Though it's a long shot, you should try to understand them well. Who knows what you might gain from them?" Pickle Berry said to Lady Lunara, who nodded thoughtfully.

"For now, we can only wait and see what comes of this. But I'm happy. If these two really awaken the Ancient Yin-Yang Bloodline, then this world will be much safer from now on.

However, the tribulation won't be easy. If their bloodline is what I believe it is, then they will have to fight a life-and-death battle. I only hope they can succeed."

Klaus turned and looked at Asha, who was already panicking inwardly.

'Senior,' Klaus called out mentally.

[You can't help them. Entering their tribulation isn't something you can do. However, she can help them, since they are her companions,] the senior responded, offering a solution that made Klaus smile.

He knew what needed to be done, and when the time came, he would act. For now, all they could do was wait and observe—the tribulation that would define the two sisters' path of ascension.

Chapter 800 - 800: Rebirth of the Yin-Yang Sisters (2)

"The Yin-Yang Tribulation has seven forms," Pickle Berry said.

"For these two young ladies to pass, they must conquer all seven. Of course, since they are two people taking on the same tribulation, it will be much more dangerous."

"Does this mean this type of tribulation can descend on just anyone?" Klaus asked, looking toward the clouds. The cloud formation showed something powerful was about to descend.

However, he wasn't concerned about that yet. His focus was on something else.

"The Yin-Yang Tribulation can indeed descend on anyone. However, only those who have a light affinity or a darkness affinity usually have to deal with it.

"Of course, there are cases where those with other elements had to fight against the heavens because of this Yin-Yang Tribulation."

"I see," Klaus nodded and turned to his left, where Queen Lunara was now seated in a lotus posture, waiting for the tribulation to begin.

Pickle Berry had indeed said the laws would benefit her if she were to comprehend the life and death laws surrounding the two ladies up in the air.

Asha, who was clenching her fists, clearly panicking even before the tribulation descended, turned to Klaus.

"Klaus, are they going to be okay?" she asked with a panicked expression.

"Don't worry, they'll be fine. It's just a tribulation—no need to worry about it." He brushed her hair, assuring her.

"I just can't afford to see them suffer," Asha said, but Klaus just smiled.

"Don't worry. With me here, nothing will happen to them," Klaus reassured her again. Pickle Berry, however, turned to Klaus and raised her cute brow.

"I hope you're not planning on entering their tribulation," she asked.

"Of course not. After all, I am not their master, so entering would be akin to bringing doom on them. But like I said, with me here, nothing will happen to them." Klaus laughed.

"The heavens are useless in my presence," Pickle Berry smiled, knowing what he said was true.

He had indeed made the heavens cry blood on thousands of different occasions in many lives, so helping two ladies become Void Stage beings wasn't something to worry about.

"It's about to start," Klaus's mom, who chose not to poke her nose in Klaus's business, said, making Klaus and the two ladies standing on his left and right hold his hands.

"Linx and Jinx, relax and take on the tribulation like it's another Tuesday. Trust me, when you're done, you won't fear anything or anyone ever again," Klaus said to the twins up in the air.

They nodded and then retrieved their weapons. Jinx took out two daggers while Linx unsheathed her sword.

They may be Yin and Yang, but one is an assassin and the other a swordsman—a very powerful one, considering Linx had already awakened an innate ability, unlike Jinx, who hadn't yet.

"Be ready, Linx. It's coming," Jinx said to her sister, who nodded and started channeling energy into her sword.

Suddenly, the clouds parted, and a loud roar shook the skies. The wind stopped. The world went quiet.

From the swirling clouds above, a massive beast descended. Its body was made of black mist, with glowing white eyes that pierced through the storm.

It had no legs—just a long, coiling body like a serpent. Sharp claws extended from its arms, and each breath it took made the air heavier.

"The first form," Pickle Berry whispered. "The Beast of Balance. To kill it, they must understand balance. This means they must feel each other's energy and sync it.

At the point it is synced, that should be the moment they attack."

"But the beast won't stand there and watch them form the sync. I wonder how they will handle it," Klaus said, gazing at the creature up in the air.

The creature let out another roar. With it, a powerful shockwave spread out, shaking the trees and cracking the earth. Lightning danced around its body.

The air turned colder, as if it had both Lightning and Ice elements, when in fact, it was just pure killing intent coming from its roar.

Klaus's blood running through their veins clearly pissed off the heavens so they are showing how much they want them dead.

Linx and Jinx stood in the sky, facing the monstrous form with calm expressions. The beast growled, then lunged straight at them.

Like Klaus said, the beast wouldn't just stand and watch, then plan its death.

Jinx moved first.

Her daggers glinted as she vanished in a blur. Linx didn't move. She raised her sword and closed her eyes.

She was listening—feeling.

As someone who is akin to Yang, she knew what had to be done, and since she was connected to her sister, one of them could just go against the beast while the other focused on the kill shot.

The beast struck, but Jinx appeared on its back, slashing deep into the misty flesh. Her blades, coated in her own energy, left a faint silver light behind. But the wound healed instantly.

"It regenerates," Jinx shouted, dodging the beast's tail swipe. "Normal attacks won't work!"

"I know," Linx replied, opening her eyes. They glowed faintly whitish-blue. She raised her sword, and a ripple of sword intent surged out.

The beast turned toward her, sensing danger.

It charged, mouth wide open. Jinx, of course, prevented it from gaining momentum by blocking it with a powerful attack that created countless daggers in the air and shot them at the beast.

On the other hand, Linx moved.

One step forward.

One swing.

A deep, clean line split through the sky. It was sharp like a sword arc. However, this was thin and deadly.

The beast stopped mid-charge.

At first, nothing happened.

Then, its mouth closed. Its eyes dimmed.

The mist that made up its body began to scatter, as if sliced from the very core and then dispersed into two streams of tribulation runes entering Linx and Jinx's bodies.

Jinx landed beside her sister.

"How did you kill it?" she asked.

"I understood the balance," Linx replied softly. "It was made from yin and yang. I found the line that kept it together and cut it."

Jinx smiled. Though they are sisters, Linx is stronger and more intelligent than her. But that was why she knew with Linx by her side, everything would be fine.

The heavens shook again. The clouds twisted faster, darker. The second form of the tribulation is on the way.

"One form down," Klaus said with a smile. "Six more to go." He looked up, his eyes serious. "I wonder what they have in store for them next."
