104 CHAPTER 104

Aella 1

"Take a deep breath, then imagine what you want to do. Feel the energy around you, imagine being able to see through my own eyes." He directed.

"What's that like?" I wondered

"Well, there's only one way to find out," he replied.

I took a deep breath, ignoring the hands gripped on my arms forcing me to follow, I calmed my nerves, then finding my energy source I tried imagining seeing through Aragon's eyes, then I opened my eyes.

A wave of disappointment hit, I wasn't seeing through his eyes not to mention him seeing mine, "it didn't work" I muttered.

"Again."

"Okay" I nodded, "hopefully it works this time, something tells me we're getting closer to wherever she's headed."

"See it this way, try to imagine lending your eyes to someone else...."

"That's impossible"

"Aella—" he warned

"What! Just stating facts"

"Listen" he groaned.

"I am"

"You're impossible," then he continued,

"Imagine someone else seeing through your eyes, clear your mind, be free like a bird, no worries no thoughts just feel empty. Then seek the door that'll lead you to me and open."

I close my eyes and try to feel, exactly as he said, totally clearing my mind, letting go of all thoughts.

Suddenly I felt quiet, my body chilled, the chaotic feeling from earlier disappeared leaving me hollow and quiet.

"Find me through the void" I heard his voice,

Listening to his instructions, I imagined it, Aragon seeing through my lenses, seeing the sand, Karen's twisted face and wind threatening to block our view.

Slowly I open my eyes, but I'm still left to the same view from earlier, "it didn't work" my heart sank, how come.

"Aragon. I'm so sorry" I muttered, I could feel my shoulders sag, "Is there any other way to do it."

Silence.

"Aragon?"

"Yes?"

"I asked if there was any other means to do this? This one seems not to be working."

"Oh." He chuckled.

"What's funny?"

"It worked child."

"Huh?" my mind went blank temporarily, what was he talking about.

He chuckled, "close your eyes"

"Why?"

"Just do it."

"Alright," I shut my eyes

"Now open them, slowly."

I did as he said, "woah" I nearly stumbled back,

"Watch it" I heard Karen's voice.

I ignored her, still taking in what I was seeing, somehow I could see the pack, Aragon was at his cave, it looked so distant yet close.

I tried moving my hands to touch the walls,

"Careful" his voice had a warning edge to it, "you can only see what I see, that's how far these exact powers go. Don't move much, your body is still walking with Karen" he reminded.

"Right." I nodded, "this is so cool"

"I'll show you something even better" he stood fully, walked out, spread his wings and took off,

I almost lurched, Karen held me. Somehow I could feel and hear everything going on around me but my eyes saw through that of Aragon.

"Wow" I didn't realise when the words left me, the pack looked so small from the height he flew to, but somehow I could see everything perfectly, every single detail, down to ants crawling.

He landed soon, "That was amazing, but how do I regain my eyesight?"

"Same way."

I repeated the procedure and opened my eyes, and I was back, "Good. How fast can you get here"

"In minutes"

"That fast?"

"Don't underestimate this wing child."

"Okay, that's good. Do you mind lying low for a while, I might be able to get some information from her, something that could help us in this fight"

"You've already been gone for three days, you need to return as soon as possible"

"I know, but she might know something. Just like how I discovered Ursa doesn't know about you, think about it, if Ursa doesn't know about you what more is she in the dark about"

He seemed to fall into deep thoughts, "well, I do see your point" he hums, "She probably doesn't think there'd be a survivor from the dragon clan, well that does give us an advantage over her. Fine, you can find out whatever it is you want to, but I'll be right behind you" he finally conceded.

"Alright, just follow us closely, you can swoop in at any sight of danger" I agreed.

Then turned my focus back to my dearest captor, "I have a question"

"Don't ask" she shut me down coldly

"You're gonna want to hear it" I teased

"Not interested," she replied, stone faced.

"Really?" I eyed her, "you're going to want to hear this" I taunted ignoring the way her face darkened.

"Fine, ask" she snapped,

"What will you do if you can't find the witch's hide out. From where I'm standing, it seems everything is just sand and what not."

"When we get there you'll see"

"So you don't know her hideout." I sighed, "just like I thought" I mumbled.

"Shut up and keep moving already"

"Aye, princess"

She rolled her eyes,

"seeing as you don't know her hideout and I'm left to assume that you're solely moving based on instincts, what about the captives she took? Any idea what she's planning on doing with them?"

She groaned, coming to a halt, "do you ever shut up?"

"Nahh, that's one of my qualities, even your Alpha loves me for it. You should try it sometimes" I shrugged.

If my guess was right she wasn't allowed to inflict harm on me, which meant two things, either Ursa needed me intact or she just wanted to inflict the harm herself, well either way none sounded good.

Sigh.

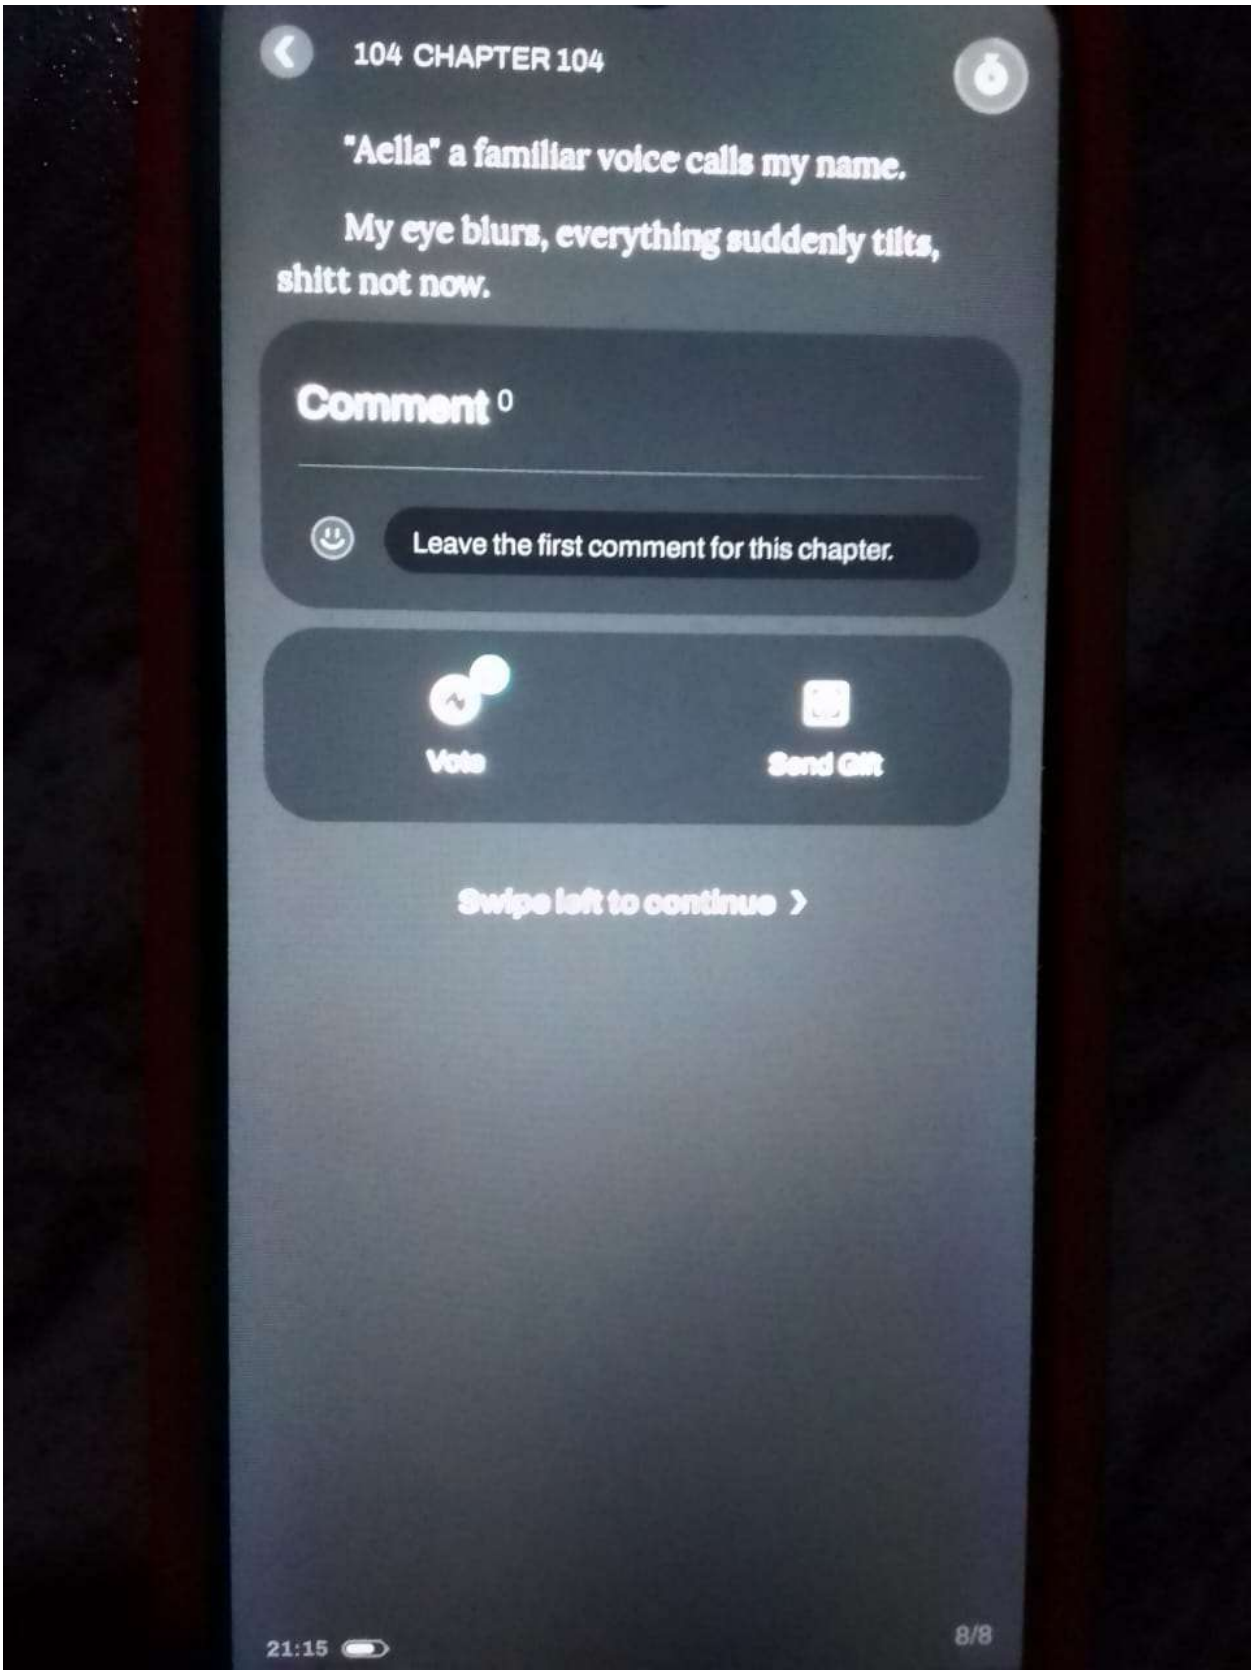

"You don't know her hideout, nor what she's planning to do with the wolves she kidnapped, and I'm guessing you don't know her next plan, so in other words you're basically useless"

She eyed me, but continued her journey, probably determined to ignore me for the rest of the journey.

I chuckled, what a fool.

She was most likely an expendable part of Ursa's meaning her death won't be so far away after handing me over to Ursa — not that she can.

Well, guess that's my cue to leave.

104 CHAPTER 104
"Aella" a familiar voice calls my name.
My eye blurs, everything suddenly tilts, shitt not now.
Comment 0
Leave the first comment for this chapter.
Vote
Send Gift
Swipe left to continue ›
21:15
8/8