109 CHAPTER 109

Aella 1

A shiver ran down my back remembering what had happened. If Aragon had come any later I probably would have ended up in her hands.

"Witches were exterminated." Ava muttered.

"Then what did we see back then? How come? And in such numbers? That was literally a troupe"

"Could some of them have escaped back then?" She reasoned.

"Not in such numbers. If a few escaped, the number we saw didn't scream exterminated species or even regrowing species"

"The number was indeed enormous" Ava agreed,"

A wild thought crossed through my head, "What if they faked their deaths or most of their population escaped?"

"Then witches were truly terrifying to have been able to pull that off, deceiving the entire population into thinking they had been wiped out"

"Well that aside, she knows about Aragon now, we've lost our advantage." I sighed regretfully.

"Doesnt matter, she would have found out sooner or later, its good we know she knows. Gives us more time to prepare against her.

"What are you thinking about Luna?" A voice asks out of nowhere

"Ahh" a startled scream left my lips, "What the hell. Sage, are you planning to kill me?"

"If that's all it takes to kill you Luna, then I'd be pretty disappointed" his eyes twitched with amusement "and in my defence i knocked, but you were too engrossed in whatever you were doing to hear me"

"Fair enough. I did not expect you to be back so soon" My voice dripped with sarcasm,

"I ran into some issues, surprisingly I couldn't find the picture, maybe some other time then." he suddenly hesitates, his face becoming more serious, "Your children"

My heart skipped at the mention of them, was anything wrong with them. "What about them"

He advanced towards me, eyes closed, inhaling deeply, "Such power" his eyes widened, "Such life force,"

My nose scrunched, what in the world is going on with him, "Excuse you?"

"My bad. Just that I haven't felt such life force in years, still embryos and yet so powerful, three distinct life forces. I can feel them."

Okay , this dude was beginning to creep me out. "Care to explain?"

He gave a weird smile, his eyes turning distant, "The triplets Luna Supreme, they are bubbling inside you with so much life force, I have a gift Luna. While I can heal, I can feel as well."

"That's a good thing... right?" I was uncertain.

"In a way. But even newborns haven't given off such power, not to mention ones yet to be fully formed." He muttered, "You're carrying powerful children Luna. That may be why you are only exhausted."

"ummm...." I looked at him questioningly

"It's only a wild theory, but I believe they sensed your danger and lent you their power which could be one of the reasons why you had fainted from exhaustion when Alpha brought you back."

"It can't be"

"You'll be surprised to find that almost anything is possible in Goth Luna. This is the land of magic, we live and breathe for it."

"But.... How..." I paused, earlier I had indeed felt much lighter, who would have thought that it would have anything to do with my little ones.

"Wait.... How do you know all these?"

His lips curved, "Being a healer is so much more than just healing Luna, what I feel is energy, all living beings have one. It's the same way I can tell that just like you, they are anomalies."

My gaze turned slightly stiff, I fought the urge to lash out, "Anomalies? My unborn babies? You're going too far Sage"

"I don't sugar coat words Luna. They are indeed anomalies, and the scariest part about being an anomaly was not the forces that would prevent their birth but even the balance of the universe will be shaken, it will try to prevent their coming into this world. You will have to be careful Luna."

"I think I'm going to have to stop you there" I shook my head, I've heard enough.

Sorry. He mouthed the continued, "They have been chosen as Children of destiny, you and Alpha will have to not only protect them but guide them too, until they come of age to fulfill this great destiny."

"Hell no" I stopped him,

His eyes shone with surprise, "No?"

"You are not going to ruin my children's lives with some stupid talk about whatever destiny, they are ordinary kids that will grow up happy and ordinary too."

He looked at me like I had just said something ridiculous, "deep down you know it too, you can feel. They are anything but ordinary, you have to accept it Luna, cause even if you don't other species will and they would come for them sooner or later"

"I never knew a healer could turn into a seer" I sneered.

Sigh, "I know you just want them to be safe Luna, that's what every parent wants, but they are not ordinary. You have to accept that, the sooner you do the better. Give it a thought, if even I can feel their energy, what makes you think there aren't others who can?"

Something hot boiled within me, who the hell did he think he was? How dare he try to dictate what my children were or were not, "you should know better than to piss off a pregnant wolf Sage, better think of your next words carefully" my voice lowered now.

But deep down, I knew what he was saying may not be far from the truth. If anything, the fact that Ava was mostly asleep alone was likely an indication. Pups draw strength from their mothers and if they are indeed as strong as he was claiming now, then it would all make sense.

It would explain a lot, but he definitely could not be right, they deserved the right to live for themselves, what sort of destiny was trying to rip unborn kids from a childhood they've never even seen.

"Why do you think you fell for such a petty drug?" His deep voice hit once more.