Chapter 34

A/N:
I won't be posting a note at the end of this chapter to keep the momentum up so please remember to comment and vote!

As for the sequel, some of you have graciously guessed correctly what it's about. I'll be posting the title next update.

Get ready to have your minds blown.

Gemma Lancaster

Patrick had already been in the North for a month before we got the message that he successfully had the detective with him, and that he was coming back to help me in Lightning. He rejected when we heard the news—I couldn't keep a smile o my face for days—but I knew the battle was half over. Patrick still needed to bring the detective safely to the palace and not being detected. He was expected to be home in two weeks. That meant he would miss my 18th birthday.

Jon had no choice but to recall all his men from River Lycan. He eventually sent word to Patrick and the guardsmanship had it called, but the rest of the pack remained in Desert Fang. Jon did the same thing and requested for their detailed security arrangements so that Patrick could keep them as well.

We wouldn't be able to correspond with Patrick until he set foot in Lightning, he was set to leave.

Meanwhile, Jon and I stuck with each other like glue during the next few weeks as a Captain Deau and Alpha had to be. We both needed support. Jon's father was still in a coma, and Jon's Alpha Training Regimen had me up and I seemed to run a lot. What would happen once this war would take us to two ill- event places? Who would be there to take care of him?

What if something bad happened to him? Would I have the courage to do as I promised and leave him to have if even things became too toxic? Would he really abandon his title just to make sure I was safe? And what would happen if we had kids? I mean, ever since the miscarriage we had been taking this potion weekly for birth control but it's never a guarantee.

Oh my Goddess. I suddenly imagined myself giving birth in the middle of the battlefield.

Badass Alpha Female.

With all the stress, I didn't even realize that tomorrow, it would be two months since I actually became a princess. When I brought this up to Jon, he insisted we go out on a date to celebrate.

I put on a lovely pale blue dress with sky-blue underneath in case it got cold. I layered my dress with a fur-y scarf and I strapped in some comfortable shoes. I didn't want to have to walk in heels. I wanted to be able to run if I needed to. I was a princess, but I was also an Alpha. When we first started, I'd literally take a moment to stare at Tom in awe. I had been so intimidated by the fact now I felt at ease in the company.

No longer was he Jonathon Lancaster, the big scary perfect princeto-be was just Jon, this wonderful man who took care of me and whom I loved.

We walked hand in hand towards the town, the tall snowdrapes casting a warm glow over the cold brick road. I noticed his hand was ever occasionally shaking, so I gave them a squeeze. It was a cold morning.

"Hey, you seem frigetic. Are you alright?" I asked. Jon shook himself before looking down at me, giving me a reassuring smile.

"Yes, I'm fine. Just, hungry that's all." Jon cleared his throat. He blinked a few times before taking a deep breath in. He grabbed and clutched at his pecs. His movements fast and nervous.

I knew what this was about.

"You're nervous about Patrick, aren't you?" I asked. Jon looked at me, surprised. "I can tell. I don't think anything can make your mood a loss."

"Will you at least try? I don't want to be thinking of my brother during our ten month anniversary." Jon chuckled.

I see, Patrick's going to be him. He's not going to encounter any trouble. Just have a little faith." I cooed. Jon exhaled a ragged breath.

"I know. I know," Jon resolutely said. "Come on, let's just eat. Tonight, there's no war, no attacks... just us..."

Jon pulled me into a lovely Italian restaurant right beside the town's courtyard. At that time was a big fountain in the middle. It ended in some pears and he ordered steak. We also ordered a bottle of red wine. A lot of diners gawked us, nodding their heifes but I was thankful that we were in alone. The candles in the middle of the table flickered beautifully, highlighting Jon's sharp features.

"So, ten months in, what have we learned?" I asked, twirling some spaghetti with some on my fork.

"Number one, sometimes getting drunk together can fix your problems." Jon promptly said. I giggled. He drank a big chunk of steak and reached across the table. "Wanna taste?"

"Sure." I said, leaning in to bite the steak in his fork. The next tasted of blood but I loved the eyes, moaning in delight. "That's so good!"

I looked at Jon, and he was staring at me, mesmerized. I blushed and went back to my pasta.

"I learned not to keep my mate alone with attractive captains from the tribunal because he's one devious, oblivious motherfucker." I winked at him. He grinned, laughing as he put his hand on his face. I tackled some spaghetti onto my fork and a ward it to him. He tasted it.

"Damn great. " He mobbed.

We should try that! Lady and the Tramp thing where they nudge meatballs with their noses and this with the spaghetti? I said, suggestively, raising my eyebrows.

"We can recreate it in wolf form if you want." He winked. I laughed.

"Can we even digest spaghetti as wolves?" I asked, twirling but another laugh.

"Only one way to find out." Jon said, motioning to remove his clothes. I vaunted to laughter and held my hands up.

"No! No, no!" I laughed, almost choking on some wine. Jon winked as we before turning back to his own.

"I learned how to share. I have to admit, it was hard getting used to sharing my bathroom with a girl." He smuggled.

"Hey, I pick my hair out of the drain and I don't complain when you forget to put the toilet seat down!"

"But your girl sis has been over my counter."

"It is a counter, we're supposed to put sh- on it..."

"Well you know what, I don't care anymore. I've gotten used to it." Jon grinned. I raised my wine thoughtfully.

What else have I learned?

"I learned that di- arrest people...have di- arrest love languages..." I said. Jon stopped and stared at me, smiling.

"How so?"

"Well, he way you always ask me what I want to eat every time I feel sad...It shows me how much you love me and are mindful of my addiction to food." I said. Cute overwhelming sensation. I wanted to but he shrugged and smiled.

"That's...that's nothing, Gemma. I mean, you and food go together that even I'm jealous. Besides, I like how you show your love to me better," Jon said.

"Oh!" I asked. My heart fluttered, awaiting the deep declaration of a kitchen it was saved. Jon always had a way with words, and I was giddy to hear what he had to say.

"You're great in bed." Jon said with a serious face.

What?

"Oh MY GOD HAHAHA."

I couldn't help it.

I doubled down and cackled in laughter. It was the kind of laughter that was loud—that you couldn't stop no matter how hard you tried. Jon's face was priceless, and I knew he was trying to keep it that way. But my Psyche had started it soon and I was wailing my head and was not trying to get me to stop but I couldn't stop. I could see how he was trying to hold back his own laughter.

"OH MY GOD. OH MY GOD...HAHAHA. HOW THE...OH MY GOD..." I had to stop laughing, and Jon was now apologizing to all the other diners.

Eventually, I managed to calm myself down. I blushed to my cheeks, suddenly embarrassed about all the attention I had drawn to us.

"Jon...what the hell...I haven't laughed like that in ages..." I whispered, putting my hands on my face. He put his hand over his mouth, chuckling.

"You're such a drama...I said all those nice things and that's all you can come up with?" I teased, gulping down some water.

"Goddess, Gemma, I love you so much." Jon winked at him and his cuddly eyes, resisting the urge to swoon.

"You're not getting any laughs." I warned. He pretended to look horrified.

"But it's our ten month anniversary." He gasped. I giggled.

"I can't...I can't believe it's been ten months...it feels like I've been with you longer than that." I remarked, sipping some wine.

Jon nodded thoughtfully at me.

"You ever think that we were just meant to be with each other?" Jon asked. I sat straight up, startled.

"Whoa, when did you become Ryan Gosling?" I asked, befuddled.

"What? Who's he, I mean...I can't imagine myself being mated to anyone else...but you..." Jon chuckled. "What would have happened if I didn't claim you?"

"Do you really wanna answer that?" I asked.

"Hypothetically." Jon said.

Hmm...

"Okay. Well, let's say I met against Alpha Theodore. Sire or Iyke, the twin Sire's were boys. Assuming I survive the next three claiming ceremonies unmated, I'd join the human world the moment I turned 25 and the claiming ceremony was no longer required. Be wonderful to even have met. By the time you're like ready to claim a mate, I would no longer be a part of this world." I said. Jon sighed dejectedly.

"And you'd probably claim your queen—some Alpha's daughter with a clean rate or one of the female war heroes..." I said. The thought of Jon claiming another woman had me feeling down.

"Gemma, I'm not claiming anyone else. I'm not a monster."

"Yep. Last year was the only year our paths would have crossed. Nothing a claiming ceremony." I replied.

"I think...I think some part of me realized that. That's why I claimed you the way I did, and why I reached you more..." Jon trailed.

"Some part of you wanted me, and you went for it." I shrugged. "Of course, the flashiness of my bracelet did not to my shyness."

Jon reached across the table and held my hand in his.

"I know I've never said this but...I'm sorry I claimed you...the way I did. I'm sorry I killed an Alpha, and that I murdered your father. I'm sorry that Ian, he didn't deserve to be scared of me...a carrot of your mate. I'm sorry I didn't give you a choice." Jon said, looking down at the table.

I blinked, tears threatening to fall from my eyes.

"Jon...I've already forgiven you for all of that. Besides, I think I did have a choice. It really wanted to fight you. I think I would have. I mean, I think some part of me wanted to be with you too."

Silence followed.

"If I claimed a mate or the war, I think it wouldn't be the same as what we have right now. I would have missed out on a lot. But that doesn't mean I'd be any sooner and I love my pack. But when I claimed you, I wanted you. I wanted you as a princess. I was a man who wanted a mate." Jon smiled.

Tears slid down my cheeks and I cleared my throat, hastily wiping them away. I had Jon's hand.

"Don't you fucking dare claim another mate a-the-se-."

Now it was Jon's turn to laugh, although he didn't embarrass himself like I did.

"Even if that wasn't even remotely illegal, my heart's already owned by someone."

"You not who made this pasta? Cause that's who owns mine sorry." I shrugged. Jon chuckled and pinched my cheek playfully.

"I Love, let's get out of here." Jon said.

He called for the check and paid for our meal. Jon wouldn't let me spend—he insisted that it was our money anyway. I excitedly don't to the bathroom, and I was thankful that there was no one in there. I took from before I was gone to fix my hair and my face. I had spent millions of dollars he owed them, Jon still had some serious money.

Just saying, if we did decide to up and leave the werewolf world, I think we'd be more than comfortable for the rest of our lives.

Jon and I walked hand in hand around the town. It was around 9 in the evening, and a lot of stores were closing down. We walked up to my mind as we strolled across the cobblestone streets, staring at the beautiful architecture and the snowfall around us. The fountain looked so delightful and romantic, making the night seem even perfect.

We found ourselves walking back to back to the fountain. The fountain was still on, with pretty lights casting lovely glows across the water. I leaned down and saw hundreds of little silver coins littered on the fountain floor.

"Did you ever make a wish here?" I asked, looking at Jon who was looking intently at the water. He shook himself and smiled at me.

"Yes. Lots of times. I took Patrick here a lot when we were still kids and he had me one of I wishes because he'd make millions of wishes," he chuckled.

"He's such a kid anymore." I chided, bumping his side playfully.

"Nope. Now he's somewhere...somewhere hopefully safe." Jon sighed. "Would you like to make a wish here, I'll throw you?"

He took out a silver coin from his pocket and turned his back on the fountain. He put one hand over his eyes and motioned for me to go forward. A or a few seconds, he threw the coin back over his head and it plopped in the middle of the fountain.

"What did you wish for?" I asked.

"If I tell you, it won't come true." He said, putting a silver coin on my palm. "You try."

I nodded and stood my back, turning to look to the fountain. The last time I made a wish was during the festival. Now, I had what I wished for—a loved me, and I wasn't him. What more could I want?

I wish Jon and I would survive this war.

I put my palm over my eyes and threw the coin back over my head. When I heard it plop in the water, I opened my eyes and grinned. I turned to Jon.

"There! Jon. Goddess..."

Oh Goddess...

Jon was down on one knee, holding up a diamond ring.

Holy. Shit.

Oh Goddess is this really happening!

"Jon...what are you..."

I said listen." He said. I shut up. "I know somewhere don't do weddings...we claim, we mate, and that's it. But I didn't do that properly with you and...and you deserve the best. I want to marry you, Gemma. I want to marry you in a real wedding. I want to marry you in a beautiful white dress—I don't care if it's tomorrow or at the ten...I just want to marry you. Even though I'm a monster and I'm not meant to love you for the rest of our lives, I want to say my vows to you in front of our friends and family one day...I love you." Jon said, his voice glistening in his eyes.

Oh Goddess.

I felt tears running down my cheeks as well. I wanted to freeze the moment because it was just so wonderful.

"Besides, it fits right in with our plans to start a new life in the human world...I want us to be husband and wife in the most normal of the words. I chose you, Gemma, and you chose me. So...Gemma Grace Reese..."

"Why did I ever tell you my middle name...?" I sniffled. He chuckled.

"Will you marry me?"

That did it.

I bawled my eyes out. I don't know how long, I just couldn't take it. The tears wouldn't stop flowing.

This kind of have to give me an answer and my legs are starting to hurt..." He muttered.

I laughed through the tears and nodded.

"Yo if I'd ever say no! No, Jonathon Lancaster, I'll marry you."

Decided. With that, Jon slipped the beautiful ring onto my finger and picked me up, twirling me around. He put me down and gave me a kiss that left me breathless. I could hear the fountain rushing down only a little bit. The sound of celebration.

"Oh Jon, you're just so perfect..." I sighed, pressing my head against his chest and looking him close.

"You're my fiancée now." He mused buoyfully.

"Yeah, and we're gonna have a gorgeous autumn wedding with..." I was about to tell on and on about my dream wedding when his phone rang.

Jon growled. I detached myself from him.

Answer it. Maybe it's urgent." I said, pouting. I was not in a fantasy world. My mate had a war to wage. He looked at me apologetically before looking at his phone. He frowned.

"Who is it?"

"Alpha Jason." He said through gritted teeth. "What the fuck could he possibly want at this time of night?"

Jon answered the phone and turned so I could hear the conversation.

"You Late Jason, just can't claim your mates the proper way, can you?"

"Excuse me?" Jon growled.

"I just sent your brother a—I didn't know he was taking a boat back to Lightning. And I sorry, I didn't give him any incubbaRhyo Jason said.

My blood ran cold. Jon sir- stood.

"You sent Patrick?" Jon demanded. I could hear Alpha Jason chuckling over the phone.

"Yes. You should have informed us, Prince Jonathon. My men were ready to attack on sight. Thankfully one of the patrols recognized him. I won't be reporting this to the tribunal, but it will cost you."

What?

"What is he going to report? That Patrick was on a boat? That's not illegal!" Gemma hissed.

"You should use your brother's one mate. She's a pretty little thing with a funny scent. Mark's still fresh. At least she waited until the claiming ceremony, eh? Goodbye and good night, Prince Jonathon.

Continue to next part