

Chapter 111

After the program crew tallied the red flowers, Charles announced to Lindsay's group, "Congratulations on winning the most red flowers and earning first place.

"As we mentioned earlier, the group that came first can make a request to the program crew. Have you decided what you'd like to ask for?"

Lindsay, Elric, and Wendy all looked at Leslie.

They had already discussed beforehand what they would ask for if they won.

Leslie, being the eldest and the most courteous among them, was chosen to be their spokesperson and get some extra screen time.

Smiling at the director, Leslie said, "We've already discussed this. If we win first place, we'd like the program crew to donate a library and a set of musical instruments and art supplies to the village school.

"The children love extracurricular books, singing, playing instruments, and painting, so we hope they can continue to expand these interests."

This request surprised everyone but was understandable.

The children were delighted, their eyes lighting up as they looked at Charles.

Doing something meaningful like this was something Charles was more than happy to agree to.

He gave a thumbs-up gesture. "No problem, and we'll make sure to cater to the children's preferences."

Hearing his confirmation, the children cheered.

Lindsay's group watched their joyful faces and couldn't help but smile genuinely.

This left the other group feeling quite bitter.

They had been completely outdone.

Olivia, in particular, couldn't help but feel jealous.

Lindsay's group really knew how to put on a show, ensuring they would be praised online.

Her guess was right; the live stream comments were full of praise for Lindsay's group.

After the program ended, both groups returned to the yard to pack their belongings.

Charles collected their current phones, saying they could use the same phones again for the next season.

At the same time, he instructed them to open their suitcases and retrieve their own phones.

Then, Charles announced the end of this season of the variety show and shut down the live broadcast.

This time, they didn't need to walk down the mountain; the program crew had arranged cars to pick them up using the regular road. Each guest would return in the same car they came in.

At the pickup point, the cars were already waiting for them.

Eric wanted to spend more time with Lindsay, but the unresolved issue between Lindsay and Justin made him hesitant. If he requested to be in the same car as Lindsay, it might affect her reputation.

So, he smiled and asked his group, "Are you all heading back to the capital?"

The three nodded. "Yes."

Eric suggested, "How about we all share a car? We can chat on the way to the airport, making the time pass faster. We're all heading to the capital, so we should be on the same flight."

Lindsay and the others agreed. "Sounds good."

After discussing with Charles, the four of them got into a car and were the first to leave.

In the other group, Alex and Olivia were supposed to share a car.

Alex thought about the online situation and invited Justin. "Justin, why don't you join us in our car? I have something to discuss with you."

Justin had been staring at the car carrying Lindsay and her group, hoping to ride with her and talk about the recent revelation of their relationship.

However, he was a step too late.

Hearing Alex's invitation brought him back to reality.

"Alright," he agreed.

The three of them got into the same car, leaving Sharon awkwardly standing alone.

Watching their car drive away, she felt a surge of anger.

Without the live broadcast, the trio revealed their true colors, completely ignoring her and leaving her behind.

Sharon accepted that big shots like Justin and Alex might not acknowledge her, but it still felt unfair.
