

Chapter 132

Halfway through, a cheerful female voice suddenly called out to her, "Linds!"

Hearing the familiar voice, Lindsay looked up. She saw a stunning, tall woman waving at her from the front. It was her best friend, Jenny Ford, Justin's twin sister.

They used to be very close, but after Justin returned to New Horizon, the siblings gradually drifted apart.

From the first day they met, Jenny and Lindsay hit it off immediately. The more time they spent together, the closer they became, becoming best friends.

Lindsay beamed with surprise. "Jenny!"

Jenny quickly rushed over and hugged Lindsay tightly. "Darling, I've missed you so much!"

Lindsay hugged her back. "I missed you too."

After they let go, Lindsay linked arms with Jenny and asked as they walked, "Why did you come back?"

After a big fight with her family, she left the country to follow a love interest. In Lindsay's previous life, Jenny never made it back before Lindsay died, though they'd always stayed in touch.

Jenny had been a constant source of support, always taking Lindsay's side during arguments or tense silences with Justin. So, when Lindsay spotted Jenny out of the blue, it caught her completely off guard.

Jenny turned to Lindsay with a look of concern. "I saw the trending news. I knew you were coming back to the capital today, so I bought a ticket to fly back. I originally planned to go to the apartment first and surprise you.

"But as I was walking, I heard people talking about you. I turned around and found we were at the airport at the same time."

Seeing Lindsay being slandered and her conflict with Justin, Jenny was worried Lindsay might be hurt or upset, so she rushed back to be with her.

Lindsay felt a warmth in her heart and rubbed her head against Jenny's shoulder. "I'm fine. You're the best, Jenny."

Jenny, with a doting expression, said, "Of course, I'm your best friend."

Justin was quite surprised to see his sister there. Now watching his sister being so affectionate with Lindsay, completely ignoring him, he couldn't help but speak up. "Jenny, did you let anyone in the family know you were coming back?"

Hearing Justin's words, Jenny turned to look at him.

"Why should I?" she retorted.

Justin frowned. "How are we supposed to get ready and welcome you back if you don't give us a heads-up?"

Jenny shot him a look and rolled her eyes. "You don't have to do that.

"I'm not going back home."

Justin emphasized, "That is your home."

Jenny rolled her eyes again. "I don't care. I don't want to go back and be disgusted by that woman."

Justin's frown deepened. "She is your mother."

He knew his sister so well that, thanks to her habit of always calling their mother "that woman," he automatically understood who she meant whenever she used that term.

Jenny waved her hand impatiently. "Don't mention her to me. It's annoying."

Then she released Lindsay's arm and turned to face her brother. She scanned him from head to toe.

Justin felt confused. "Why are you looking at me like that?"

Jenny showed a disdainful expression. "I'm looking at my brother, who turns out to be a cheating jerk."

Justin's face darkened. "Jenny, is that how you talk to your brother?"

Jenny sneered. "Not only will I talk like this, but I'll also beat you up."

Then, to everyone's surprise, she swung her fist and punched Justin in the left cheek. Before he could react, she started hitting him all over.

"Justin, you bastard, teaming up with those shameless people to bully my Linds. Do you think you can get away with it? I'll beat you to death. Since you returned to the capital, you haven't learned anything useful.

"But you've perfected that woman's cold and disgusting behavior. No wonder you're her biological son." 1