

Chapter 136

Abby never expected her daughter to become increasingly disrespectful, growing more rebellious with each passing day.

Abby sneered. "Jenny, it's because of your poor choice of friends that you no longer act like a proper heiress."

Lindsay, hearing this, knew Abby was likely referring to her.

Sure enough, Abby continued, "You even hit your brother for the sake of someone who doesn't belong in our circle. You've completely lost your mind. Come home immediately and stop associating with that Lindsay."

Jenny scoffed. "Madam Ford, I think you must have forgotten, but I remember clearly that you were born into an ordinary family and only became a socialite by marrying Mr. Ford.

"The Harper family might have lost Linds for over a decade, but she's still their true heiress. Her status is much more prestigious than yours. Even if you're jealous of her status, you don't need to be so bitter and disparaging."

These words made Abby so furious she nearly fainted, her voice rising sharply. "Jenny, you ungrateful child. If you have the guts, why don't you follow Lindsay's example and leave the Ford family? You two are indeed birds of a feather, both utterly lacking in manners."

Lindsay, hearing this, looked at Jenny and pointed to her own mouth, asking if she could speak.

Jenny gave her an okay gesture.

Lindsay then said sarcastically, "My, my, Madam Ford, such impeccable manners you have, trashing people when you think they can't hear you. Truly a testament to your character. No wonder you clawed your way up from nothing to become the oh-so-refined lady you are today."

She had met Abby a few times and knew the woman never liked her.

Before returning to the Harper family, when she was still dating Justin, they had met Abby. Justin had introduced them, and as Lindsay was about to greet her, Abby gave her a disdainful look, making it clear she found Lindsay unworthy.

Naturally, Lindsay had a temper as well.

Seeing Abby's attitude, she responded with equal coldness, not bothering with greetings.

Abby had then complained to Justin about Lindsay's lack of manners, suggesting he break up with her.

Jenny had overheard this and told Lindsay.

After she was recognized by the Harper family, despite Abby being friends with Grace, she still disliked Lindsay, showing a clear preference for Olivia.

There were two more instances when Abby had made snide remarks towards Lindsay, probably expecting her to quietly endure them.

However, Lindsay retaliated, leaving Abby humiliated and increasingly resentful.

Of course, Lindsay didn't like Abby either.

They mutually disliked each other.

So, it wasn't hard for Lindsay to guess that the pendant must have been a gift from Abby to Justin, who then secretly gave it to Olivia.

Abby likely wanted Olivia to be her daughter-in-law.

On the other end, Abby was startled when Lindsay suddenly spoke, and she was so furious that she would strangle Jenny if Jenny were in front of her right now.

How dare Jenny put her on speakerphone, deliberately letting Lindsay hear their conversation?

Abby couldn't maintain her composure after Lindsay's sarcastic remarks.

She sneered. "Did I say something wrong? Your words just show how ill-mannered you are. I'll be sure to discuss this with your mother."

Lindsay laughed deliberately. "You should hurry then, and have a good chat with your dear friend, Mrs. Harper. After all, I might have a mother, but I clearly wasn't taught by my parents."

Abby was taken aback by Lindsay's retort. "You—"

She then turned her attention back to Jenny. "Jenny, I give you one hour to get back here, or don't bother coming back to the Ford family ever again."

Abby knew that even when Lindsay was with her second son, she never respected her and often spoke rudely to her.

Now that Lindsay had a falling out with her son, she would be even less inclined to show any respect.

So, she shifted all her anger to Jenny.

big sale: 100 bonus free fou you get it