

Chapter 149

They arrived at the school gates well before dismissal time.

Lindsay, having come prepared, swiftly located Albert's car. Through the open window, they could see Albert smoking, his gaze fixed distantly to one side, his posture radiating dejection.

Lindsay and Jenny walked over, and Lindsay raised her hand to knock on the car door. Albert snapped back to reality. When he turned his head and saw Lindsay, he was taken aback. "Miss Summer!"

Although he wasn't very close with Lindsay, she wasn't a stranger either. Lindsay used to be an artist with Harper Entertainment, but she hadn't used much of the company's operations and PR resources.

The rumor was that Lindsay had offended her agent, Oliver, and was therefore sidelined like them.

Previously, they believed it.

Lindsay possessed a rare combination of stunning looks, refined temperament, and exceptional acting skills. Industry insiders recognized her immense potential and believed she had a strong chance of ascending to stardom. However, her career seemed hampered by limited resources, suggesting deliberate suppression by her agent.

Recently, the hot searches and online commotion revealed that Lindsay was actually Oliver's biological sister. Which meant she was also the biological sister of the company CEO. They couldn't understand why her two brothers would outcast their own sister.

Rumors suggested the motive was to advance their adopted sister's career at the expense of their biological sibling. This strategy baffled them. They couldn't comprehend why both sisters couldn't be promoted simultaneously, especially given Harper Entertainment's abundant resources.

This decision seemed particularly puzzling given that Olivia didn't match Lindsay's talents in any significant area. The strategy appeared shortsighted, akin to prioritizing a minor gain at the cost of a much greater potential asset.

However, Oliver and his brothers were very arrogant and nepotistic. Doing something like this seemed normal for them.

Lindsay smiled and said, "Mr. Watson, we'd like to talk to you. Can you spare a few minutes?"

Albert had been following the events of the past few days closely. He had to admit, Lindsay had made a remarkable comeback.

From a situation where she was about to be blacklisted across the internet, Lindsay suddenly turned things around and became a subject of public sympathy.

Now, both Justin and Olivia were being criticized, and the PR team hadn't found a good way to manage the backlash. The company's PR department was still scrambling.

Albert admired someone with such skill. He put out his cigarette and smiled. "If you two ladies don't mind, we can talk in the car."

He had to wait for his child to finish class, so he couldn't take them to a café to have a discussion.

Lindsay nodded. "Sure!"

After opening the back door, she and Jenny got in and sat down. Albert checked his watch; there were still more than ten minutes before dismissal.

So, he got straight to the point and asked, "Miss Summer, what brings you here specifically to see me?"

Lindsay didn't beat around the bush, "We've started a studio and are in need of an operations team, so we wanted to invite you to join us."

Albert looked surprised and turned to Lindsay, "You started your own talent studio?"

Lindsay nodded. "Yes. Since Oliver and his brothers want to blacklist me, I'll start my own studio and make sure they can't do anything about it."

Albert's eyes showed a bit more admiration. "Miss Summer, that's impressive."

The Harper brothers had made no secret of their intention to blacklist Lindsay. Consequently, other entertainment companies were likely to hesitate in signing her, either out of fear of reprisal or a desire to avoid industry conflict.

In light of these circumstances, Lindsay's decision to establish her own studio demonstrated remarkable courage and determination.

Then he shifted his tone, "But I'm really sorry, I don't have any plans to leave Harper Entertainment for now."

Others had tried to recruit him before, but the former CEO had been very good to him. Plus, Harper Entertainment offered a good salary and was one of the top three entertainment companies in the industry.

Despite being sidelined by the Harper brothers, he hadn't thought about switching jobs.

And besides, Lindsay's studio was still in its early stages, with an uncertain future. If he were to switch jobs, he would prefer to take his team to a stable entertainment company.

Lindsay wasn't surprised that Albert declined so decisively.

Considering the current state of her studio, it didn't offer any advantages that might entice him to switch to her side.

She had come prepared.

She took a folder from her bag and handed it to him. "Mr. Watson, this is my operational plan for the studio. Take a look and see if you're interested."

Although Albert had no intention of switching jobs, he would still give her the courtesy of looking at it. He took the folder and started to flip through it, becoming increasingly impressed.

He clearly hadn't expected Lindsay to understand operations so well.
