

Chapter 152

Robert said, "Indeed. How else could I have smoothly outmaneuvered Albert and secured his position? Both Oliver and the CEO are set on removing the former CEO's appointees.

"Shortly after Oliver joined the company, Albert managed to offend him. It's clear someone has to go, and Albert's made himself the prime target.

"However, given his years of competent management, the CEO couldn't justify replacing him without cause. We needed him to make a misstep. Once we obtain the data from him, Oliver will have the grounds to remove Albert and his entire team."

Mary replied, "I understand now. Two years ago, when you instructed me to get close to Albert, focusing on his son and mother to manipulate him into marriage - was Oliver aware of this strategy?"

Robert responded, "Of course, he's aware. When Oliver conducted his investigation, it revealed that Albert's primary vulnerabilities were his mother and son. I leveraged that information, directing you to approach him from that angle to ultimately undermine his position."

"You guys really have patience."

Robert smirked. "Of course, we're people who handle big things."

"Let's go somewhere else to continue."

"Alright, I want to see how capable you are today."

Upon hearing this, Albert's face darkened beyond measure.

Instead of kicking the door open, he took a deep breath, saved the recording, and quietly left.

Charging in now would only alert them.

He didn't leave the company but returned to his office.

Without turning on the lights, he turned on his computer and began copying all the useful data.

His face was filled with anger and gloom as he copied the files. He never expected that his young wife had been deliberately placed by the new director.

His first wife had died in an accident a few years ago, leaving him with a son. He hadn't intended to remarry.

Two years ago, Mary was assigned as his assistant. She was young and beautiful, always attentive and caring towards him. What set her apart was her kindness towards his mother and son, regularly taking his son out to play each week.

Mary explained that her actions stemmed from her deep love for him, accepting him completely. Moved by her sincerity and with his mother and son also approving of her, their relationship solidified. After dating for a while, they eventually married.

Later on, he overslept twice, once missing a crucial meeting and another time missing the prime opportunity to handle PR for an A-list actress at the company. Consequently, he was demoted from his directorial position. He had always wondered how he could have overslept, as making such elementary mistakes was unlike him.

It turned out that oversleeping was Mary's doing. And the worst part was that Oliver and the CEO both knew about it and had colluded with Robert to kick him out.

Lately, Mary had been frequently throwing tantrums, causing chaos at home. He had been baffled by her behavior, not understanding why she was acting that way. Now, he realized she wanted a divorce.

The most outrageous part was that these two even planned to frame him as the one at fault for the divorce, so they could take a large portion of his assets.

At that moment, Albert felt not just heartbroken but also consumed by rage, a profound sense of betrayal, and a feeling of being manipulated.

He suddenly remembered something Lindsay had said earlier that day: "If it were me, I would make them pay."

At the time, he hadn't understood why she said that.

Now, he not only understood but completely empathized with the situation. This level of betrayal was intolerable. Being manipulated like this, he also wanted to make them pay.

At the same time, he was awed by Lindsay's insight. Had she foreseen all of this?

Seeing that the data on his computer had finished copying, he deleted everything and ensured it was irrecoverable. No one would ever be able to retrieve it.

After sitting for a while longer, he finally got up, left the office, and returned to his car. He didn't start the car immediately but instead sat deep in thought for a long time.

Then he took out his phone and dialed Lindsay's number that he had found on his computer earlier.