

Chapter 162

Edmund took the phone and read the message, a complicated expression crossing his face. No wonder his brother was so angry; Lindsay's words were truly infuriating.

"She won't really do it, will she?" Edmund asked.

Oliver frowned. "She shouldn't be doing this, should she? If she dares to embarrass us like this, does she really expect to return home without consequences?"

Edmund thought for a moment. "You're right, she's probably just trying to rile you up."

Just then, Oliver's phone rang. It was his assistant calling.

"What is it?" Oliver answered.

An urgent voice came from the other side. "Oliver, Lindsay just posted on Instagram to shame you. What should we do?"

Oliver's eyes widened in disbelief. "She actually dared?"

He hung up and quickly opened Instagram.

Sure enough, Lindsay had updated her status.

"I've severed all ties with the Harper family. I hope we don't interfere with each other anymore. The called 'best contract in the industry' from the esteemed Harper family manager? He thought he could silence me with it. Brotherly love? Where was that when I needed it?"

"Do you think I'm a fool? Keep that minimal affection for yourselves."

Don't offer it to me, I don't need it. They wanted me to post a 'clarification' that goes against the facts and my conscience. I refused. I don't care about that so-called best contract anymore. Don't bother me in the future!"

Oliver's expression darkened after reading it. His chest heaved with anger. "She dared, she actually dared!"

"Damn it, she's tricked me again. This isn't a sister; it's an enemy."

Not only did she embarrass him, but she also rejected an A-list contract that was offered to the company's leading star. She put him, Justin, and Olivia, in a difficult position.

What did she mean by asking her to post a "clarification" that went against the facts and her conscience? Though he had intended to ask her to clear things up once she signed the contract, he hadn't even mentioned it to her. How could she falsely accuse him?

Now that Lindsay had posted this, the money spent to remove the trending topics before had been in vain. He feared people would inevitably start making all sorts of sinister speculations and come after them once more.

Edmund, seeing his brother losing his composure again, reached over and took the phone. After reading the post, his expression also changed. "She actually did it."

"Isn't she afraid that because of this, we won't accept her anymore?" Edmund questioned.

Oliver couldn't help but curse. "She's not afraid of anything. She's doing this on purpose to oppose us and to shame me."

He couldn't understand. "How does it benefit her if I, her brother, were to get humiliated? She really doesn't make any sense."

He was nearly driven to the point of madness.

Edmund frowned even deeper. "Let's focus on managing the public relations first."

Oliver took a deep breath, trying to suppress his anger and think rationally about how to resolve this.

"This really is the best contract in the industry. I'll have the PR department emphasize this point," he said.

"Why would we use the contract as the narrative to shut her up? I'll have the PR team spin the story that I care about her as my sister, and it's her who doesn't appreciate it and bites the hand that feeds her."

Edmund sighed. "That's our best option."

He found it increasingly difficult to understand Lindsay.

Oliver didn't waste any time and posted on Instagram himself.

He wrote that he only wanted to compensate his sister, so he offered the company's best contract to Lindsay and had no other intentions.

He asked her not to misunderstand, even going so far as to upload a photo of the contract with sensitive company information blurred, to demonstrate his good intentions. However, she failed to appreciate it.

Moments later, Oliver's phone rang again. It was his assistant.

Oliver answered, "What now?"

The assistant said, "Elric just posted a message to add fuel to the fire."

Oliver was speechless. Previously, Elric had helped Lindsay target and bully Olivia and put down Alex. Now he was stepping in to oppose them again.

Oliver didn't remember doing anything to provoke him!

"This is insane. Can that bastard act like a decent human being?"
Oliver muttered in frustration.
