

Chapter 167

After arranging a meeting with the three artists, Albert first called Lindsay and then headed to the café.

Lindsay and Jenny had just finalized the location for their new office.

To show their commitment to the three artists, they rushed to the café immediately after signing the lease.

In the private room of the café, Albert laid out all the pros and cons for the three artists, explaining the situation clearly.

He also mentioned his own decision to lead his team in switching companies, demonstrating his confidence in their future boss through his actions.

Initially, the three artists were skeptical about Albert's offer.

Given their current situation, which reputable entertainment company would want them?

They suspected that this might be a ploy to squeeze the last bit of value out of them.

However, when Albert revealed that he was bringing his entire team along, their doubts began to dissipate.

A handsome man with a cold demeanor finally spoke up, "Mr. Albert, you've said a lot, but you haven't told us which company we're switching to."

Just as Albert was about to answer, his phone rang.

He picked it up and provided the room number.

He then turned to the three artists and said, "It's not an entertainment company but a newly established studio. The boss is here, and you'll understand once you meet them."

This piqued the artists' curiosity even more.

The boss was personally coming to meet them?

Moments later, there was a knock on the door. Albert stood up to open it, smiling broadly. "Ms. Summer, Ms. Ford, please come in!"

Lindsay and Jenny greeted him with a smile, "Mr. Albert!"

As the two entered the room, the three artists were momentarily stunned.

They were clearly surprised to see Lindsay.

Though they weren't familiar with her, Lindsay had recently gained fame, turning heads with several impressive comebacks.

This had naturally caught their attention.

Besides her excellent performance on the reality show, everyone had been following the drama involving her, the Harper brothers, Justin, and that foster daughter.

They had a certain level of respect for Lindsay.

They knew what kind of person Oliver was and how he had outcasted other artists he targeted.

Yet, Lindsay not only withstood his pressure but also continuously fought back, much to their silent satisfaction.

They never expected that Lindsay would be the one to start a new studio and try to recruit them.

Hadn't Star Entertainment offered her a lucrative contract?

And yet, she had turned it down.

Once Lindsay and Jenny sat down, Albert introduced everyone.

He gestured towards the cold, handsome man, "This is Joshua Howard."

Then, he introduced the cool, stylish young man next to him, "This is Hector Yates."

Finally, he pointed to the beautiful woman who appeared somewhat weary, "This is Fiona Satt."

He then introduced the three artists to Lindsay and Jenny, "This is Lindsay Summer, the owner of the studio, and her partner Jenny Ford, who is also the heiress of the Ford family."

The three artists, gathering their surprise, greeted them, "Hello, Ms. Summer, Ms. Ford!"

Lindsay and Jenny responded with friendly smiles, "Hello!"

Lindsay continued, "Albert has already talked with you, so I won't waste time with unnecessary details."

She pulled out three prepared contracts from her bag and handed them to the artists according to their names. "These are the offers from our studio. Each contract includes a detailed plan for your development and career direction at our studio. Please take a close look."

Rather than boasting about how great their studio would be or how they planned to grow, Lindsay focused on what truly mattered: the terms and future prospects.

The three artists were pleasantly surprised by Lindsay's direct and straightforward approach, which they found quite appealing.

Anyone could make empty promises.

They had come to Harper Entertainment because of similar promises made by their former managers, only to receive subpar treatment and contracts.

Fiona's contract, for example, started in an entry-level position and progressed steadily through her sheer determination.

CommentsSupportShare