Chapter 175

Oliver couldn't understand it.

He asked his assistant, "How did Fiona manage to become a guest on the show? Did she sign with a major company?"

He wondered if Ryan had done something impulsive, signing Fiona just to spite him.

But that didn't seem like Ryan's style, especially considering Fiona's tarnished reputation seemed beyond repair.

The assistant replied, "No, she didn't go to a major company. I found out that she signed with a newly opened studio. By the way, Mr. Albert and his team also joined the same studio. You had asked me to keep an eye on Mr. Albert, and that's how I discovered Fiona's signing."

Oliver was momentarily stunned. "They jumped to a newly opened studio?"

He suddenly remembered what the manager had mentioned earlier and instructed with a stern face, "Investigate which studio is so bold as to directly oppose us."

The assistant nodded. "Yes, I'll look into it right away."

Meanwhile, Albert and his team started working at the new studio.

They found that, although it was just a studio, the space was quite large, occupying an entire floor.

The office furniture was new and very comfortable.

Each person had a new desktop computer and a high-end laptop. There were also dedicated areas for resting, dining, and working out. The break area was stocked with coffee, various juices, lots of snacks, and fresh fruit.

The working environment and comfort were much better than at Harper Entertainment.

Fiona, Joshua, and Hector also arrived at the studio.

They found that each of them had a private office suite, furnished to match their individual tastes and preferences. Jenny even provided additional allowances for them to purchase decorations they liked, a gesture for which they were deeply grateful.

In their previous experience at Harper Entertainment, they had never had their own private offices.

Instead of having individual offices, they had all shared a single room.

Lindsay had cake and drinks brought to the break area and called everyone over for a welcome tea party.

She took the opportunity to discuss the studio's upcoming plans.

Everyone felt comfortable and relaxed, excited about their new work environment.

After discussing business, Lindsay engaged in casual conversation to build rapport.

During this time, Fiona's phone rang.

Seeing it was her former agent, she hesitated before stepping aside to take the call in a quiet spot.

Two minutes later, she returned and sat next to Lindsay.

Leaning in, she whispered, "Ms. Summer, my former agent just called to inquire about my new studio and who the owner is. It seems Harper Entertainment's higher-ups have found out that Mr. Albert and we have moved to the new studio."

Lindsay smiled nonchalantly. "It's okay. If she asks again, just tell her the truth. The studio is mine, and Jenny is the major shareholder."

Then, addressing everyone present, she said, "The same goes for all of you. Don't hide anything. We're openly opposing Harper Entertainment, so there's no need to be secretive."

Albert, having jumped ship with his team and Fiona securing a guest spot, would inevitably attract the attention of the Harper brothers and other entertainment companies, prompting investigations into the new studio.

Any significant moves would soon be exposed.

Albert said with a smile, "Ms. Lindsay is right. They learned about this sooner or later, so let's just be prepared."

Lindsay noticed that after resolving the issues at home and with a strong desire for revenge, Albert seemed revitalized and full of fighting spirit.

She continued, "I predict that starting today, or at the latest tomorrow, Harper Entertainment will take action. They will likely use the fact that I've opened a studio and signed Fiona, who's had a tarnished reputation, to make a fuss. Be ready with our PR strategy and ensure Fiona's remaining fans steadfastly believe in her innocence."
