

Chapter 52

Lindsay finished helping the teenager with his questions and continued to assist two more children, patiently answering each one.

Everyone else was doing a great job with their teaching as well.

The village children cherished this rare learning opportunity and studied diligently.

Of course, there were a few funny moments during the lessons, most of them thanks to Elric.

After two hours, the children left the courtyard.

Soon after, they returned with various meats, vegetables, and fruits their families had prepared, which they presented to Lindsay and the others.

Holding a basket of fresh herbs given to her by the teenager's grandmother, Lindsay suggested, "How about we have lemon herb baked fish for dinner tonight?"

Elric, Leslie, and Wendy eagerly agreed.

Lindsay headed to the kitchen to prepare the lemon herb baked fish. Both men offered to help clean the fish but fumbled with the task.

Lindsay didn't mind, and once they finished, Wendy washed the fish and Lindsay skillfully sliced it with a kitchen knife.

Watching the precise, thin slices of fish, Leslie was amazed, "Linds, your knife skills are incredible."

Elric examined a few slices, equally impressed. "This is impressive!"

Wendy's eyes sparkled as she looked at Lindsay, "You definitely have the skills of a professional chef."

Lindsay smiled at the three of them.

"I took some lessons before."

She then began marinating the fish while the others continued to help.

The two large fish brought by the farmers earlier in the day were turned into lemon herb baked fish, served alongside a hearty pasta dish.

Just then, Justin, Alex, and Sharon returned from their work outside. As they approached the courtyard, the enticing aroma hit them.

Sharon couldn't resist asking, "What delicious food is the other group cooking?"

Having eaten only a little in the morning and finding the farmer's lunch mediocre, she was now quite hungry.

Olivia, smelling the same aroma, felt uneasy. She knew it had to be Lindsay cooking. "I don't know."

Then, she tried to be considerate. "What do you want for dinner? I'll cook it."

Sharon, her nose filled with the tantalizing aroma, blurted out, "I want to eat whatever they're making right now."

Olivia's smile wavered for a moment but quickly returned to normal. "Sure, I'll go check it out. If it's something I know how to do, I will make it for dinner."

She added with an eager determination, "Even if I don't know how to do it, I can ask the production team for cooking videos and learn on the spot."

Sharon forced a smile, though she wanted to roll her eyes. "Thanks, that'd be great."

Justin, recognizing the aroma as Lindsay's cooking, felt a pang of envy.

Hearing their conversation, he looked hopefully at Olivia. "Dinner's in your hands."

Olivia smiled sweetly at him. "No problem, leave it to me."

In the live chat comments:

"Do you think our angel can make lemon herb baked fish?"

"Maybe, she can always watch a video for guidance."

"I mean the same taste as Lindsay's."

"That might be tough. Lindsay's lemon herb baked fish looks mouthwatering even through the screen."

"Agreed. Just watching her cook made me hungry."

"Lindsay's culinary skills are top-notch; you can tell from her knife work and ingredient handling."

"Olivia will have a hard time matching that."

"How do you know our angel can't do it?"

"Yeah, Olivia is just as good as Lindsay."

"Our angel even took cooking lessons before coming to the show."

"Don't underestimate her abilities."
