

Chapter 63

In the past, Sharon would have despised this kind of environment and food. Now, she was just relieved to have something normal to eat after dealing with Olivia's cooking. She had a thought and, looking at Olivia, deliberately spoke up for the cameras.

"We're out here, but I wonder what Mr. Harper is eating back in the courtyard. Should we ask our host to cook another plate of spaghetti and deliver it to him?"

Olivia suddenly realized her mistake. She had completely forgotten to prepare breakfast for her brother.

At home, the servants took care of everything, and after yesterday's exhaustion, she had overslept this morning.

She had been focused on how to perform well today and had overlooked her brother entirely. Internally cursing Sharon for bringing it up, she responded with a knowing look.

"My brother always skips breakfast the day after he's been vomiting. If he eats, it will only make him more nauseous. Giving him spaghetti would just make him feel worse. By lunchtime, I'll ask our host to prepare some oatmeal for him."

This was a convenient excuse to cover up her oversight, avoiding backlash from Alex's fans watching the livestream. Sharon wasn't convinced but didn't press the issue. "Alright then."

In the courtyard, Lindsay and her team had planned to assist a local family with traditional olive oil pressing today. After finishing breakfast and cleaning up, they prepared to leave. Just before heading out, Lindsay made a suggestion to Charles.

"Given Alex's condition, he really needs to eat something. Can you make sure he gets some oatmeal?"

She wasn't genuinely concerned about Alex but wanted to highlight Olivia's neglect. Olivia would likely claim that Alex couldn't eat due to his condition, and Lindsay wanted to expose that lie.

Charles, not wanting any issues with Alex, quickly agreed. "Sure, I'll have an assistant prepare some oatmeal for him right away."

Once the oatmeal was ready, Charles' assistant brought it to Alex's room.

Feeling both miserable and hungry, Alex gratefully accepted the warm oatmeal and ate it quickly, finishing two small bowls without any further nausea. When the assistant mentioned that Lindsay had suggested making the oatmeal before she left, Alex felt a mix of emotions.

Despite his discomfort, he realized he still yearned for someone to care about him. The fact that Lindsay had thought to ensure he had something to eat gave him a glimmer of hope. Perhaps she still cared about him as her brother.

After eating and taking some medication, Alex fell into a deep sleep without further incidents.

This turn of events did not go unnoticed by the viewers.

Many were disappointed in Olivia. She had clearly forgotten to make breakfast for her brother and, instead of showing concern for his health, had dismissed Sharon's suggestion to send him some food.

Alex's fans were particularly upset. They noted that Alex was obviously hungry; otherwise, he wouldn't have consumed two bowls of oatmeal.

Moreover, the oatmeal helped him settle his stomach, so he could take his medicine. This stark contrast between Olivia's negligence and Lindsay's thoughtful gesture led to a significant drop in Olivia's popularity among viewers.

Comments flooded in, criticizing Olivia for her lack of concern compared to Lindsay, who had been at odds with Alex but still showed more care. The disparity in their actions was glaring, and many expressed their frustration.

Grace, watching the livestream, also felt a rare pang of dissatisfaction with Olivia.

The comparison between her and Lindsay, coupled with the viewers' comments, made her wonder if this was the fundamental difference between a biological daughter and an adopted one.

big sale: 100 bonus free fou you get it