

Chapter 72

Lindsay saw everyone looking at her with surprise.

She chuckled. "Why are you all looking at me like that?"

Elric came closer. "You can play all these instruments?"

Lindsay nodded. "Yes, I've learned them all."

She had learned the fiddle from Moses, and during her travels, she had picked up almost every instrument she encountered. She was quite familiar with the ones here.

Elric's eyes sparkled with admiration. "Our Linds is amazing."

Lindsay smiled. "Thank you for the compliment!"

The elderly man was initially surprised but then smiled warmly and beckoned Lindsay over.

"Come here, young lady. I'll give you the sheet music, and you can try these instruments."

Lindsay nodded. "Sure!"

The elderly man took out a few books of sheet music from the cabinet, opened one, and pointed to a page.

"Try playing this piece on the fiddle."

Lindsay carefully scanned the sheet music, then sat down and took the fiddle handed to her by the elderly man. She began to play, producing a lively tune.

The elderly man smiled with satisfaction. "You play the fiddle very well."

He then had Lindsay try the cymbals, drums, dulcimer, and trumpet.

Lindsay confidently and calmly played each instrument according to the sheet music provided.

After she finished, the elderly man's smile grew even wider. "Excellent, you can handle the accompaniment perfectly. There's no need to find anyone else."

Lindsay smiled. "Alright, I'll handle the music."

Charles chuckled. "Ms. Summer has saved us a lot of trouble."

Wendy and Leslie couldn't help but admire Lindsay. Although they didn't play these instruments themselves, they could tell she was very skilled.

Wendy curiously asked, "Linds, besides these instruments, can you play any others?"

Lindsay replied, "Yes, a few more."

Wendy continued, "Like what? Give us some examples."

Lindsay said, "I can also play the harp, mandolin, flute, recorder, ocarina, piano, violin, guitar, saxophone, bass, and a few others."

Everyone present was speechless.

They suddenly wanted to ask her if there was anything she couldn't do.

She was amazing.

Elric's eyes sparkled with amusement. "You can play the guitar too? How about we play a song together when we get back?"

Lindsay nodded. "Sure!"

Wendy pointed to a mandolin on the shelf. "Linds, I'd love to hear you play the mandolin. Can you play a piece for us now?"

Lindsay also had a fondness for the mandolin, which she had learned and practiced for a long time in an ancient world.

"Of course!"

She asked the elderly man if she could use the mandolin.

Not only did he agree, but he also personally took it down and handed it to her. "I would love to hear you play a mandolin piece too."

This young woman was increasingly likable.

Comments started appearing on the live stream:

"Lindsay can play so many instruments? She's got to be exaggerating."

"I think the show must have a script. Lindsay is just following it. There's no way she can play all these instruments."

"The pieces she played earlier were probably rehearsed beforehand."

"The show is so fake, clearly pre-arranged to impress us."

"And they dare call this 'reality.' I'm going to report this."

"Is the show biased towards Lindsay? They let her do everything."

"I heard Lindsay got a spot on the show because she saved the director's wife."

"Think about it, with such connections, isn't it fishy?"

"This is ridiculous. The director is clearly trying to promote Lindsay, coming up with scripts for her to perform and fooling us."

The chat was suddenly filled with complaints and skepticism.

The initial negative comments came from a group hired by Oliver. He had created personas for Olivia as a loving sister and talented young woman to contrast with Lindsay. However, these efforts failed, and worse, they were completely overshadowed by Lindsay.

big sale: 100 bonus free fou you get it