

Chapter 75

"What baseless confidence. So shameless."

"Since Lindsay is so confident and bold, let's not hold back."

The hired trolls quickly looked for obscure and difficult pieces. Lindsay not only played all of them flawlessly but also captured the essence and emotion of each piece.

"Wow, Lindsay is incredible."

"How is my bias so amazing?"

"My bias is extraordinary, I love it!"

"She played them all, perfectly. That's just awesome."

"The main point is that she used different instruments, exactly as the trolls requested. I'm switching sides."

Lindsay's performance on various instruments thrilled her fans and won over many viewers who had been skeptical or neutral. Her Instagram follower count surged once again, and the live stream videos were quickly uploaded online.

Just like her boxing video, the video titled "Lindsay: Bring It On" also went viral. It attracted even more viewers to the live stream, including enthusiasts of traditional instruments.

"Where are the people who said Lindsay had been following a script? Why aren't they speaking up now?"

"If you're so great, you try performing like that for everyone."

"If this was all scripted, then I'm impressed."

"Where are the critics now? Say something."

"They're probably nursing their bruised egos."

Lindsay's fans and new followers mocked the earlier doubters in the comments. At this point, the hired trolls and critics fell silent. What else could they do? Continuing to attack Lindsay would only backfire.

At the Harper household, Oliver watched the live stream with a dark expression. He hadn't expected his sister to be so proficient in so many instruments, effortlessly playing even the most obscure and challenging pieces.

His plan had backfired.

Not only did the attempt to discredit Lindsay and the show fail, but it actually boosted her popularity. Her performance videos went viral, proving that the show truly was unscripted and authentic.

Raymond watched the live stream and turned to Oliver. "Oliver, your plan backfired! I told you before that Lindsay is very talented in music, yet you had the trolls attack her musical skills."

Raymond was a highly popular and talented singer. Over the past year, his relationship with Lindsay, although she wasn't as close to him as she was with Alex, was still fairly good. Lindsay would often help him practice his songs, prepare home remedies for his throat, and make throat lozenges for him.

However, he had also hoped Lindsay would understand her place in the family and not compete with Olivia or cause trouble.

That's why he had supported the efforts of his brothers to suppress her.

Now, seeing Oliver's plan fail and instead elevate Lindsay, he felt both proud and conflicted.

On one hand, he was proud that his sister was so talented. On the other hand, he worried that Lindsay's impressive performance would overshadow Olivia.

Oliver glared at him. "If you can't say anything helpful, keep quiet. You did mention she had musical talent, but how was I supposed to know she could play so many instruments?"

He asked, "Did you know?"

Raymond shook his head. "I didn't know she could play this many instruments."

He added helplessly, "She plays more instruments than I do..."

Brandon was also surprised by Lindsay's performance. He frowned. "The problem now is, what do we do about Olivia?"