

Chapter 77

Fans gained from variety shows weren't very loyal and could easily switch their support. They wanted to capitalize on that.

Brandon said, "Alright, once this season ends and they return, I'll talk to Lindsay."

Lindsay still respected and cared for Brandon. When he needed a small role filled in his drama, she helped out without hesitation.

Last summer, he endured a lot while filming a drama outdoors. When Lindsay found out, she brought cold drinks to the set almost every day. When he lost his appetite, she prepared herbal remedies and delicious snacks to help him eat. She even made cooling sachets for him to wear, which worked effectively. 1

Because of this, Brandon was confident he could convince Lindsay to take on the role of the second female lead. Once Olivia gained popularity, he planned to compensate Lindsay, possibly by casting her as the lead in his next drama.

"As for how to make Via stand out in the next season and make a strong comeback, I'll leave that to you," Brandon said.

Oliver pondered for a moment and then turned to Raymond. "Raymond, you could write a song for Via. I've heard that in the second and third seasons, they might go to big cities and even abroad. We can have Via sing the song and claim she wrote it herself, creating a talented musician persona."

The sibling bond and sweet persona hadn't worked well this season. A new image would be better for the next one.

Brandon agreed, "Lindsay showed her vast knowledge and skills this season, and the audience loved it. A talented musician persona for Via sounds great."

He added, "She could also be portrayed as an academic achiever since she graduated from a prestigious university abroad. And we should find an opportunity for her to play the piano. She studied it and can definitely impress the audience."

Raymond chimed in, "Via is really good at the piano. I think this could work. Piano is her specialty. I don't believe Lindsay could outshine her in that area."

Oliver nodded. "Alright, I know what to do."

Oliver, eager to get started, was ready to coach Olivia on how to outshine Lindsay. He was confident this time he wouldn't fail.

Suddenly, Edmund who had remained silent until now, spoke up, "If the next season of the variety show is set to be filmed abroad, it would be advantageous for Via."

Olivia had attended university overseas and had a strong command of foreign languages and customs.

"When this season ends, I'll have my secretary talk to Mr. Barker," Edmund said, squinting thoughtfully. "If they haven't planned to go abroad, I'll invest to make it happen."

Hearing this, the other brothers' eyes lit up.

"That's a great idea," they agreed.

No one would turn down receiving more investment, and knowing Charles's style, he would likely agree.

Following this, Raymond was pushed by his brothers to start writing a custom song for Olivia. Oliver redirected the trolls to stop attacking Lindsay and instead start promoting Olivia.

Meanwhile, Lindsay had no idea her brothers were plotting against her. After showcasing her talents with various instruments, she earned even more recognition from her group and the elderly puppeteer.

Having gained the elderly man's approval, he began teaching her how to score music for the puppet play. Lindsay, quick and sharp, mastered everything he taught her on the first try.

The elderly man watched her with regret, "You have such a gift," he lamented.

Unfortunately, this talented young woman was now a big star and unlikely to join the world of puppetry.

Otherwise, he would have really liked to introduce this talented young woman to his old friends in the capital. But on second thought, even if she didn't pursue this field, it wouldn't hurt to make the introduction. So, he planned to call his old friend that evening for a chat.

Meanwhile, Lindsay quickly mastered the music, and the elderly man moved on to teaching Elric, Leslie, and Wendy how to perform and voice the puppets.

Elric, having some acting experience, and Leslie, a seasoned actor, both picked it up quickly.

Wendy, being a singer, was initially slower in grasping the skills. However, she was smart and gradually improved with more practice.

By the end of the afternoon, the four of them had made significant progress and were able to perform a puppet play, although not yet flawlessly.

The elderly man had a positive impression of the four young people. He noticed they were all genuinely interested in learning and weren't dismissive or half-hearted.

He said, "Come back tomorrow afternoon for more practice, and you should be ready by then."

The four nodded eagerly. "Okay!"

The audience was also impressed with their progress, especially towards Lindsay, who continued to amaze everyone. They couldn't help but look forward to their performance the day after tomorrow.

Meanwhile, in the town, Olivia and her group were facing difficulties in their plan to earn money through performances.