

Chapter 79

The smile on Olivia's face froze completely.

Lindsay, Lindsay, it was always Lindsay.

Why was this woman so hauntingly persistent?

And since when did Lindsay know how to play so many instruments?

Her thoughts mirrored those of her brothers, thinking Lindsay had been deliberately hiding her talents.

If she had known Lindsay could do all this, she wouldn't have suggested coming all this way to play the guitar.

Not only did it fail to highlight her talents, but it also made her a mere backdrop to Lindsay.

Lindsay must have done this on purpose.

That little wretch was too devious.

Olivia was furious, her chest tightening with rage.

She felt like she might explode from anger.

At the same time, Olivia regretted even more. If she had known, she would have stayed in the village. And she shouldn't have asked the staff member about the feedback. Knowing the result just made her feel worse.

The staff member noticed Olivia's pale face and felt a bit sympathetic.

She was just unlucky to have run into Lindsay.

"It's also because of those haters. Mr. Barker said it was probably hired trolls who were trying to discredit Lindsay. But instead of succeeding, they actually helped her."

She continued to console Olivia, "So your performance was actually very good, just unlucky to encounter this situation."

Hearing this, Olivia could guess who had hired the trolls. It was most likely Oliver. But this time, she didn't feel grateful to him; instead, she felt resentment.

She thought Oliver should have done better research before hiring trolls to attack Lindsay.

Now, not only had he helped Lindsay, but he had also made things worse for her.

If it weren't for Oliver's consistent favoritism toward her, far exceeding his affection for Lindsay, she might have suspected him of doing it on purpose.

Olivia had no mood to continue dealing with the staff member. She nodded perfunctorily. "I'm fine."

In reality, she wanted nothing more than to rush back to the village and slap Lindsay.

At that moment, Alex noticed the dejected Olivia lagging behind. He called out to her, "Via, come on up here."

Olivia forced herself to pull it together, plastering a weak smile on her face as she walked over.

Normally, she would offer plenty of suggestions while buying groceries to assert her presence, but now she was listless, responding with indifference to everything.

The live stream viewers noticed her demeanor and assumed she was upset because they only made fifty bucks.

Except for her fans and Alex's fans, others thought she was being narrow-minded. After all, they were on a variety show; it should be taken lightly, and they should enjoy the experience. Dwelling on such a minor issue seemed petty and overly serious, which led many viewers to think less of her.

Due to the town's low cost of living and prices, they managed to buy a piece of meat and some vegetables with fifty dollars. After shopping, they got into the car provided by the production team and headed back to the village.

On the ride back, Olivia was deeply upset and pretended to sleep with her eyes closed. Her silence prompted Justin and Alex to stay quiet as well, so they also closed their eyes to rest.

Sharon watched them in disbelief.

Were they really going to let the viewers watch them sleep during the entire ride?

This variety show experience was turning out to be a disaster for her. She increasingly regretted choosing this group.

Although she hadn't thought much of Lindsay's status initially, she couldn't deny that Lindsay had a knack for variety shows and was quite capable. If she had chosen the other group, she wouldn't have to worry about food and would get more screen time.

She suspected her performance and screen presence this season would be the lowest. The more she thought about it, the angrier she became. With the other three resting in silence, Sharon had no chance to shine.

In the end, she also closed her eyes, resigning herself to the situation.
