

Chapter 80

The viewers watching the live stream were speechless.

They wondered, "What are they doing? Did we tune in just to watch them sleep?"

Alex and Justin's fans initially enjoyed watching their idols rest, but after a while, even they grew bored.

Consequently, a large number of viewers switched to the other live stream.

By this time, Lindsay and her group had returned to the courtyard and gathered the children who had come to learn.

They continued rehearsing for the performance scheduled for the day after tomorrow.

Over the past few days, they had already choreographed the show and had the kids practice. The rehearsal was full of fun and laughter, which delighted the audience.

During dinner, Adam and Jason invited Lindsay and her group to join them for a meal. They mainly wanted to discuss the idea of live-streaming to sell local products.

Lindsay and her group agreed.

As the other group finally arrived back at the village, exhausted and hungry, they heard their phones beep. When they checked the group chat, they saw that Elric had posted several pictures of a sumptuous dinner.

The four tired and hungry individuals were speechless.

Alex couldn't help but complain, "That guy is such a jerk."

Even Justin couldn't hold back. "He's being cruel on purpose."

Elric was acting like a complete jerk.

Olivia saw the pictures and felt a wave of frustration and the urge to cry.

Why did Lindsay get all the spotlight, not have to cook, and still get to enjoy such a nice meal at a villager's house?

Thinking about the fact that she still had to cook dinner for the other three, Olivia felt dizzy with resentment and almost wished she could faint for real.

She regretted setting herself up as the hardworking and diligent one.

If she hadn't insisted on cooking, she wouldn't have to deal with it every mealtime. If it weren't for the live stream, Olivia would have broken down in tears and refused to continue.

Just then, Sharon added salt to the wound. "Olivia, I'm so hungry. When are we going to eat?"

Today's groceries were basic, and Olivia's cooking was barely passable.

After a long day, Olivia was indeed hungry, so she had no choice but to make do. She wanted to get up and slap Sharon, telling her to cook the meal herself if she was hungry. But to maintain her persona in the live stream, she forced a caring smile. "I'll go make dinner now."

She had dug this hole for herself, and now she had to fill it, even if it meant suffering through it.

Olivia got up to cook.

The other three, having gotten used to Olivia handling everything, sat and rested without helping in the kitchen. This left Olivia to cook while silently shedding tears behind the camera.

Since becoming an adopted daughter of the Harper family, she had never endured such hardship and humiliation.

She blamed it all on Lindsay.

If Lindsay had just listened to their mother and brothers and given up her spot, there would be no competition.

Olivia was convinced that without Lindsay's interference, her persona as the sweet and hardworking girl would have been a success. The other group members would have been relying on her, waiting for her to prepare meals.

The more she thought about it, the more her resentment toward Lindsay grew.

Olivia decided that once the variety show ended, she would subtly complain to her family about how Lindsay had bullied and overshadowed her. She anticipated that her family would confront Lindsay on her behalf.

If Lindsay made her life difficult, Olivia was determined to strike back.

With this plan in mind, Olivia felt less aggrieved and more hopeful. She knew that a subtle approach would hurt more, and she couldn't wait to see Lindsay suffer from the pain of being hurt by their family.
