

Chapter 91

Charles had informed the cameraman beforehand not to follow Lindsay.

After Lindsay came out, the camera continued to focus on Elric and his two friends, without panning over to her.

When Lindsay approached, Charles asked in a low voice, "Are you Alex's cousin?"

Hearing this, Lindsay guessed that Oliver must have hired fake accounts to spread rumors online.

She shook her head. "No."

Charles understood that someone had hired fake accounts to slander Lindsay.

He told her about several trending topics.

He warned, "If these trending topics about you and Alex become widely believed, it won't be good for you. You should think of a way to handle this. After the show ends tomorrow and you go back, it will be easier to deal with."

He added, "If needed, I can help you get those trending topics removed."

Seeing the concern in Charles's eyes, Lindsay felt a warmth in her heart.

Not everyone treated her like the Harpers and Justin did.

She smiled and said, "Thank you for your kindness, but there's no need to remove the trending topics. Let them slander me. The more heated the discussion, the better."

She hadn't revealed anything in the live broadcast and had let Olivia successfully change the topic.

She had already guessed that Oliver wouldn't sit idly by and would definitely stir up trouble.

She intentionally let him buy fake accounts to create a narrative.

Otherwise, just the popularity of the variety show wouldn't be enough.

If the topic trends for a few days and becomes widely known, wouldn't it be more interesting when the truth comes out?

Seeing Lindsay's expression, Charles realized his worries were unnecessary.

He chuckled. "So, you did it on purpose."

Since Lindsay wanted to escalate the situation, he decided not to intervene for now.

He then asked in a low voice, "Can you give me a hint about your relationship with Alex? So, I can be prepared and know what to do for the next episode. Of course, I won't tell anyone before you decide to reveal it yourself."

He was actually very curious about the true relationship between Lindsay, Alex, and Olivia, wanting to be the first to know the big scoop.

Lindsay didn't hide anything. "We are biological siblings."

Charles's eyes widened in shock. "Biological siblings? Then you and Olivia are also biological sisters?"

Thinking back carefully, Lindsay and Alex did have a slight resemblance.

However, she didn't look anything like Olivia.

If they were biological sisters, their private relationship must be very bad to have such conflicts during the live broadcast.

Lindsay shook her head. "She's adopted; I'm their biological daughter. But my former family always preferred her and rejected me."

Sure enough, Charles was even more shocked.

This was indeed a big revelation.

"Your family preferred an adopted daughter over their biological daughter? And what do you mean by 'former family'?"

It felt like there was more to the story.

Lindsay didn't hide anything about how her family treated her.

She briefly explained her background, "When I was a few years old, Alex lost me, and then...

"Before coming on the show, I had already severed ties with that family."

Charles took a moment to process this information, almost cursing out loud.

"Alex is really a piece of work."

No wonder the usually good-tempered Lindsay had such a poor attitude towards Alex.

Losing his biological sister and then favoring the adopted sister after she returned—what kind of logic is that?

Did they not feel any guilt or desire to make up for their past mistakes?

"It's good that you severed ties," Charles said.

He found the Harper family's behavior unbelievable. They found their biological daughter only to deliberately let the adopted daughter overshadow her—they must have been out of their minds.

Seeing Charles's reaction, Lindsay felt completely reassured.

Any normal person would react like Charles, unable to comprehend the situation.

She had felt the same way before, unable to understand why they treated her like that.
