

Chapter 92

Therefore, when the truth finally came out, Oliver and Olivia would just have to face the consequences.

Lindsay smiled nonchalantly. "Since they have shown no kindness, they shouldn't expect any from me in return."

She was also preparing Charles mentally, indicating that she wouldn't let things go easily. Once this episode of the show ended, it would be her turn to take action.

Charles wholeheartedly agreed. "You must fight back."

If she continued to endure without retaliation, those people would only push further.

He added, "If you need any help, just let me know."

Lindsay thought for a moment and said quietly, "If you want the next episode to gain more attention, focus the cameras more on Alex and Olivia's interactions."

Today, Olivia was frightened by her words, and she would definitely seek comfort from Alex later.

Charles was a smart man; he understood immediately.

He had noticed the frequent intimate physical contact between Alex and Olivia before but hadn't thought much of it since they were supposedly siblings.

Now, knowing they weren't biological siblings, their interactions seemed overly intimate.

If footage showed them hugging or engaging in other unusually close interactions for siblings, it would be hard for viewers not to imagine something more.

When their true relationship was revealed, it would attract even more viewers to watch the replay and tune into the next episode's live stream.

The show's popularity and viewership would certainly skyrocket again.

Of course, Alex and Olivia would be the first to get dragged into a trending scandal and face heavy criticism.

Charles found Lindsay quite cunning, but he liked it.

After all, her reputation was currently being smeared with labels like "ungrateful" and "leech," and she was being vilified on social media.

Charles gave Lindsay an OK sign. "If you need anything, feel free to reach out to me."

He was always grateful to Lindsay for saving his wife. Beyond gratitude, her impressive skills in divination and various abilities made her a valuable ally.

Lindsay nodded. "Alright!"

They quickly parted ways, and Lindsay walked to the courtyard entrance to join the others.

As she approached, the child in Lyle's arms reached out to her, "Pretty lady, hug."

This left Lyle speechless, feeling frustrated by the boy's fickleness.

He was willing to abandon his dad when he was a beautiful woman.

Lyle, with a stern face, said to his son, "Pretty lady is a girl. You're too heavy, and it's tiring for her to hold you all the time."

The child looked at Lindsay after hearing this and said, "No more hugs."

He then reached out his little hand. "Hold hands."

Lindsay liked the child a lot and took his little hand. "Alright, let's hold hands."

Her gentle and loving manner with the child made her fans cheer enthusiastically.

May had gone to town in the afternoon to buy groceries.

Now, she had prepared a table full of dishes, and her mother-in-law, wanting to thank Lindsay, also made several of her specialty dishes.

The whole family was very warm and welcoming to Lindsay and her group.

Lindsay said, "I have already placed the talisman around his neck. Once the evil energy is expelled, the talisman can continue to be used as a protective charm."

Seeing the talisman around the child's neck, the whole family felt a sense of relief, though they couldn't explain why.

"Thank you so much, Ms. Summer," they said.

Lyle stood up with a cup in hand. "Let me toast you. I'll drink wine, and you can have a soft drink."

Lindsay raised her paper cup. "No need to be so formal."

Everyone chatted and ate together.

Meanwhile, they had no idea that a mystic who had watched Lindsay practice boxing had recorded a video of her drawing talismans earlier in the day and posted it in a divination group.

The group quickly erupted in excitement.
