Chapter 451

Chapter 451

Chapter 451 I Have Argus' Baby

The citizens here kept quiet about Reina's matter. Jaylon's men went from house to house to question it and even promised that the person who provided the clues would receive generous rewards. But No one mentioned Reina.

After searching for a few hours, Jaylon expected that they would fail it. So he left the small town with his men and headed for the next destination.

Argus told her that Jaylon had already left and might never return. Reina still felt hard to believe it.

Perhaps it was because Jaylon was too powerful in the past, and he did have some power in Canada. So Reina just thought highly of him.

She always thought that as long as he wanted to, there would be nothing he couldn't do.

But today, Reina was so close to him at some moment. Jaylon didn't find her.

In the end, he was just an ordinary person.

After Jaylon left, Reina finally relaxed.

Just in case, she still did not join the evening bonfire party.

After sending Argus out of the door, she stayed in her room to translate the manuscript.

After coming to this small town, Reina was embarrassed to keep using Anaya's money. So Reina accepted some translation work online.

Although Reina did not earn much, she could barely make a living.

At night, she preferred to turn off the lights and work.

The room was quiet and dark, only the computer screen could be seen.

The busy voice and folk music in the distant square jumped into the window accompanied by the night wind, making Reina feel happy.

She translated a short novel and checked it again before sending it to the employer for inspection.

After sending out the file, Reina went downstairs and served herself a glass of coconut milk.

When she came out of the kitchen, she saw a tall man on the sofa.

There was no light in the room, only the moonlight on the floor-to-ceiling windows filled the living room.

The man could not be seen in the dark, but he seemed particularly clear to Reina. She knew him.

Even if she didn't see his face, Reina could picture his appearance in her mind.

She felt extremely nervous and seemed to lose her breath.

For a long time, Reina kept silent, trying to ignore the man on the sofa and sneak upstairs.

Her phone was on the second floor, and as long as she went upstairs and got her phone to call the police...

"Reina," the man called her in a low and calm voice, "it's been so long since we last met. Aren't you coming over to sit down here?"

Reina froze for a long time before she slowly turned around and walked over to sit down opposite him. It was Jaylon.

Jaylon appeared so calmly, which meant that his men were already everywhere.

He was not afraid that Reina was trying to flee at all.

Jaylon stared at Reina with his deep eyes. He sized her up as if he wanted to engrave every detail on her face into his mind.

They both kept silent. Jaylon spoke first, "Reina, why did you lie to me?"

Jaylon sounded angry but helpless, and he also seemed to have some other mixed feelings.

Reina asked indifferently, "Haven't you thought it through for a few months?"

Jaylon was speechless. After a while, he said, "Reina, come back with me."

"The engagement between Nadia and I has been canceled. You have always wanted others to admit you as my wife. I can promise you now."

"But I don't want it anymore. So what?" Reina said calmly. She put on no expression despite her delicate face.

"You have to," Jaylon said.

Jaylon's tone was much gentler than before, but he did not change at all. He was still decisive and stubborn.

Reina suddenly smiled and asked, "Jaylon, do you know what I hate most about you?"

"What?" Jaylon asked.

"You have never respected me. In your opinion, I have never been an independent person." Reina lowered her eyes.

Jaylon tried to explain, but he found that he had no excuse for it.

He repeated, "Reina, come back with me."

"Unless I die," Reina's voice was calm, but she was so determined.

Reina added, "This time, it won't be a lie again."

Jaylon narrowed his eyes. "Reina, do you have to force me in that way?"

Reina made her decision, "You are forcing me. Mr. Malpas, please leave my house now. Otherwise, I will call the police."

"It is a big crime here to break into a private house."

Jaylon did not move.

He was worried that if he left now, Reina would disappear again tomorrow.

Jaylon had already been afraid of living such a miserable life for the past few months. He did not want to experience it again.

Seeing Jaylon stay unmoved, Reina was to go upstairs and take her phone to call the police.

Jaylon thought that she was going to flee. He quickly stood up and grabbed her wrist. "Reina..."

Reina shook his hand off and said indifferently, "Let go of me."

Jaylon was stubborn and did not move. His pair of deep eyes showed that he was holding back his anger and he might lose his temper at any time.

"Reina, I won't force you, but please don't ignore me, either."

"Aren't you forcing me?" Reina began to struggle violently. "I almost died before. Can't you just pretend that I am dead?"

Reina was helpless, "Why do you try to force me to die again?"

Before she could finish speaking, Jaylon pressed his lips down and kissed her aggressively.

Reina widened her eyes in shock and struggled even more intensely. However, Jaylon's strength was much greater than hers. Reina had no way to stop him at all.

Reina was flustered and desperate. She heavily bit his tongue. Jaylon was in pain. He frowned and raised his hand to grab her waist.

Just as Jaylon placed his hand on Reina's belly, he felt something unusual and froze at once.

Reina felt it and took the opportunity to push Jaylon away. With tears filling her eyes, Reina raised her hand and slapped him.

"Jaylon! Are you crazy? I haven't seen you for so long, but you are still so irrational!"

Jaylon seemed to be unable to feel the pain on his face, nor could he hear her words. He just stared at her belly.

Jaylon opened his mouth with difficulty, "Are... are you pregnant?"

Reina was shocked and argued, "No."

If Jaylon knew that Reina had a baby, it would be even more difficult for her to leave.

Jaylon constantly clenched his hands into fists. He held his fists tightly as he tried his best to hold back his anger. Jaylon asked word by word, "Do you have a baby of that man that I met in the morning?"

"Yes, I have Argus's baby." Reina was shocked for a second, then she nodded calmly.

She continued, "I became his girlfriend when I just came to this small town.

"We have a good love relationship now, and we are already living together now. Please do not bother me again, Mr. Malpas."

Just as Reina finished speaking, the door of the living room was pushed open and Argus walked in from outside. It seemed to prove that they had lived together. "Reina, I brought you some roasted meat. Mrs. Carter said that it was good for the baby..."

Before Argus finished speaking, he noticed that another man was standing in the room.

Argus turned on the light and saw Jaylon. Then, he recognized Jaylon at a glance. Jaylon was the man who was looking for Reina in the afternoon. Argus placed the meat on the cabinet at the door and walked towards them in a hurry. Argus pulled Reina behind him to protect her. "Sir, what are you going to do with my girlfriend?"

Chapter 452

Chapter 452

Chapter 452 Reina, Shall I Sleep With You Tonight?

Argus was determined to shield Reina behind him, afraid that Jaylon would hurt her.

Jaylon clenched his fists and then let them go. He asked in a deep voice, "Reina, the baby in your belly is mine, right?"

He didn't think it through just now.

The man called Argus had been by Reina's side for a few months. Jaylon was jealous and his mind was a mess. That was why he thought that the baby in Reina's belly was Argus'.

Now that Jaylon thought about it carefully and found it was nonsense.

Reina seemed to have been pregnant for more than three months, and she had only been here for three months.

Unless Reina had slept with Argus on the first day she came here, she couldn't have been pregnant for such a long time.

Reina was afraid that Jaylon might uncover the truth, but she didn't show it off. Reina said, "It's Argus' baby. Not yours."

"Argus and I are truly in love, and we have already decided to get married. Please do not disturb us, Mr. Malpas."

"Reina, you don't know how to tell a lie." Jaylon stared at her and put on a smile. He added, "You have a habit, maybe you don't even know it yourself."

"When you lie, you would appear calmer than usual."

Jaylon said with certainty, "You were lying just now."

"I was not lying." Reina was nervous.

"Reina, I will wait for you here," Jaylon spoke gently. He believed that Reina was lying and was in a better mood.

Jaylon continued, "After you give birth to the baby, you can have a paternity test. Then we will know if you were lying."

Argus said, "Our citizens will not allow you to stay here. Please get out of here."

"I won't go anywhere. I will live here."

Jaylon said indifferently, which was the same as usual. He didn't give others any chance for negotiation.

Argus stepped forward and glared at Jaylon like a lion who stepped forward to protect his partner.

"Sir, behave yourself! Or I'll call the police to arrest you!"

Jaylon replied calmly, "Do it then."

Jaylon was no doubt so arrogant that he regarded Argus as nobody.

It was too simple for Jaylon to deal with an ordinary town resident.

Argus was a little annoyed by what Jaylon did.

Reina was worried that Argus would do something to further anger Jaylon. She quickly pulled Argus back. "Argus, don't be impulsive. You can't beat him. Let's go upstairs and take a rest."

Reina did not mean to look down upon Argus. Instead, she only stated the facts.

Jaylon got all his muscles from tough training. In terms of close combat, there were only a few people who could beat him.

Argus usually did fish work. Although Argus had great strength, he was not as skillful as Jaylon in terms of close combat.

If they indeed started fighting, it would be impossible for Argus to win.

Seeing that Reina did not believe that he could win, Argus was somewhat unhappy.

But Reina told him not to make trouble, so Argus listened to her.

When they were celebrating tonight, Argus asked the ladies in town about it and learned that Jaylon had brought over a dozen men.

If they started a fight, he and Reina would be in big trouble.

Argus calmed down and held Reina's hand, trying to bring her upstairs for a rest.

Jaylon grabbed Reina's wrist and easily made her out of Argus's control.

"Since Reina is not your girlfriend, please behave yourself. After all, you two have to keep a social distance from each other."

"Reina is my girlfriend," Argus became angry again.

"She is pregnant with my baby. How can she be your girlfriend?"

Argus said firmly, "She is pregnant with my baby."

"I didn't expect you to have the hobby of raising children for others," Jaylon sneered.

Reina couldn't bear it since Jaylon spoke to Argus in such a humiliating tone. She shook off his hand. "Jaylon, several months have passed, but you still haven't learned how to respect others.

"Argus is the father of my baby. Please show respect for him.

"I almost died before. If you pushed me too far, I would do anything and have nothing to be afraid of!"

When Reina was with Jaylon two years ago, she had also fantasized like other girls. Would she be the girl who could stand beside him and accompany him forever?

But soon, she discovered that they were different.

Jaylon was proud and arrogant, and his self-satisfaction was rarely seen in his daily social life. It would only be seen from time to time.

Later, when they became closer, he did not hide it anymore.

He never knew how to respect others.

Or, it could be said that he did not know how to respect people who had a great difference in status from him.

Back then, Reina had suffered so much when she was looked down upon and gossiped about. It was because Jaylon had never cared about the feelings of his lover with such a low status.

Reina spoke for Argus, which made Jaylon unhappy. And he even had the urge to throw Argus away.

But now, Reina was unfriendly to him. If Jaylon did so, he was afraid that he would push Reina further and further away.

Jaylon calmed down and kept silent.

Reina held Argus's hand and turned around to go upstairs. Jaylon watched them leave and followed them with a gloomy face.

Seeing them enter the same bedroom, Jaylon was shocked. He walked over in a hurry and held the door that was about to be closed.

He narrowed his eyes and asked angrily, "Have you been living together for the past three months?"

Reina asked him unhappily instead, "Did we have to sleep separately when we decided to live together?"

"Take your hand away. I'm going to close the door."

Jaylon did not intend to listen to her and planned to force his way in.

However, just as Jaylon was about to put in his strength, Argus suddenly kicked the door from the inside.

Jaylon didn't expect it and staggered back a few steps as he watched the door being closed in front of him.

Jaylon's face instantly darkened. He took two steps forward, intending to kick the door open.

Before he moved, Reina's voice came from the room. "Jaylon, if you dared to act impolitely, I would jump out from the window on the second floor along with you!"

Jaylon froze and withdrew his leg.

He had been trained before, and if he fell from the second floor, he would be safe as long as he found a good way to land.

If Reina wanted to throw him down to vent her anger, he would also bear it.

But Reina was pregnant, and if she jumped down from the second floor, she would no doubt run into something bad.

Reina risked her life to threaten Jaylon, and he had no way to go against her.

It was the first time Jaylon experienced such a feeling. He had never been so helpless before. Jaylon stood at the door of the room for a while, ready to go to the next room for a rest.

Before leaving, he warned Reina and Argus who were in the room, "I am next door. I can hear everything in your room. "Argus, you'd better control yourself!"

They did not respond to him at all. Jaylon was helpless and could only go to the next room for a rest.

Argus was pulled into the bedroom by Reina. At first, he was still angry with Jaylon and did not pay attention to anything else.

Now that Jaylon had left, Argus could not help but feel a little nervous.

"Reina, shall I sleep with you tonight?"

Reina was silent for a moment and then nodded.

Chapter 453

Chapter 453

Chapter 453 You Should Make Her Happy

With her consent, Argus's heart began to beat wildly.

"My, my toiletries are in another room. I'll go get them."

Reina said lightly, "No need. There are new ones in the bathroom. Just use them directly."

Argus nodded with a red face and went into the bathroom to wash up.

Reina sat down by the bed, took out her phone, and sent a message to Anaya, telling her the news that Jaylon had found her.

Anaya did not expect Jaylon to find the clue so quickly. She replied, "Now you don't need to make any action. I will have someone pick you up tomorrow."

Reina looked at the message sent by Anaya and suddenly felt a bit confused.

Reina: "Ana, how long do you think I can escape?"

Anaya didn't know how to answer this question and fell silent.

Anaya didn't speak for a long time. Reina knew that she had asked an unsolvable question and so sent a message to Anaya.

Reina: "Thank you for your help recently. I won't run away this time. You don't have to help me with anything."

"I plan to marry Argus and completely say goodbye to the past. If Jaylon still forces me like before, I probably won't live on."

"Good night."

After she sent the messages to Anaya, she lay down on the bed.

In the bathroom, Argus sniffed at his clothes.

After a busy day today, coupled with the hot weather, it was inevitable that there would be some smell.

He was worried that Reina would dislike him, so he went back to his room to get his pajamas. After taking a shower, he slowly crept onto the bed.

Reina lay on the other side of the bed, a distance away from Argus. Between the two of them, even two people could sleep.

Argus did not dare to move, his entire body stiff as he lay down.

After about an hour, he was still awake.

Reina seemed to have fallen asleep, her breathing long and deep.

Argus could smell the faint scent of shower gel on her body, and he could not help but move toward Reina.

After a while, he was closer to Reina.

This was the first time he had been so close to a woman. The innocent young man felt as if his heart was about to jump out of his chest.

Perhaps it was because the night was too quiet, and his emotions were greatly magnified. The feelings he had seemed to want to break through the shackles and grow crazily.

He suddenly wanted to talk to Reina.

He wanted to tell her what he was feeling right now.

He reached out and gently grabbed Reina's hand.

Just as he was about to call out to her, the hand that he was holding pulled back.

Reina wasn't asleep.

Moreover, she seemed to be somewhat resistant to his approach. Argus was upset.

In the three months that he pursued Reina, Reina was always indifferent to him.

Even though she agreed to date him later, she always maintained a distance from him.

People of their country were open-minded. Other couples hugged and kissed, but he and Reina had not held hands many times.

Previously, he always told himself to take it slow, that Reina was a reserved girl, and that she might be more conservative in this aspect.

But after seeing Jaylon today, Argus knew that Reina might not be conservative, but she had never opened her heart to him.

She kept saying that she hated Jaylon, but ever since Jaylon appeared, Argus felt that she was more vivid than ever.

Perhaps even she herself did not realize that she did not simply hate the man that appeared tonight.

Argus retracted his hand and quietly lay down for a few seconds. Then he got up from the bed and slept on the sofa.

Reina felt him get out of bed and reflected on her actions. She thought about her hurting actions and wanted to apologize to Argus.

But in the end, she did not say anything.

She was afraid that if she spoke, Argus would go back to bed.

And she was somewhat resistant to this.

She was not used to lying in bed with other men.

Because for so many years, she had only slept in the same bed with one man.

Jaylon slept next door and listened to the movements in the master bedroom at all times.

Just as he was listening carefully, his phone rang.

He took it out and saw that it was a message from Anaya.

The content of the message was a screenshot with a chat record between her and Reina.

When he saw Reina say that she would marry Argus and that she may end her life later, Jaylon's pupils shrank slightly.

Reina was determined to cut him off and be with that man called Argus.

Jaylon felt grieved. The wound on his arm that had been cut before seemed to be faintly hurting. It seemed that bright red blood was flowing out of it. It took away all the vitality he had. It was very painful.

He did not reply for a long time. Anaya sent a few more messages.

Anaya texted: "Jaylon, don't force Reina. If you force her again, she will get hurt again."

"If you really love her, you should let her be happy."

"What she wants the most is for you to let her go."

"You should try to forget her, and it should not be as difficult as you think."

Jaylon looked at the words Anaya sent over and was stunned for a long time. He didn't reply. He put his phone aside and slowly closed his eyes.

The next day, Reina got up and went downstairs to prepare breakfast. When Jaylon went downstairs, she noticed two dark circles under his eyes, as if he hadn't slept well all night.

She didn't intend to talk to him, so she didn't ask.

But Argus, who was sitting on the sofa in the living room watching TV, said in an unfriendly tone, "Did you go somewhere and flirt with someone last night, Mr. Malpas?"

Jaylon's dark eyes swept over Argus' body and quickly moved away. He did not answer.

He didn't sleep last night because of the news from Anaya, but he found it unnecessary to explain it to Argus, so he didn't say anything.

Reina prepared breakfast and served it to the table. Jaylon walked over and pulled out a chair to sit down.

His gaze fell on the table and frowned. "This is for only two people."

Reina picked up the knife and fork and slowly cut the bacon. "Because you don't have a share."

Jaylon's face was cold, and the coldness in his eyes seemed to freeze into ice dregs, silently expressing his dissatisfaction.

Reina ignored him and enjoyed breakfast on her own.

Argus also ate silently. The always lively and cheerful person was unusually quiet at the moment as if he had something on his mind.

After breakfast, Argus prepared to go out to sea.

He looked at Jaylon, worried. "Reina, is it okay for you to stay with him alone?"

Reina said, "I will go to Ruby later. I won't be alone with him." Argus was relieved and went out.

After Argus left, Reina also planned to go out.

Jaylon quietly followed her, not saying a word or making any noise.

The town was near the sea and the scenery was very good.

There were tall palm trees planted on both sides of the road. Reina walked slowly and suddenly stopped.

"Jaylon, what should I do for you to let me go?"

Her words were full of helplessness. Jaylon softened his voice, "You know how much I care about you."

Reina turned around to look at him. Under the sunlight, there was no expression on his pale face.

"Jaylon, how have you been in the past few months when I disappeared? Have you regretted what you have done?"

"Yes."

In the past few months, he had lived in pain and regret every day.

Fortunately, Reina was still alive.

"Then why did you come to me and torture me like before? Do you want me to disappear completely so that you can stop pestering me?"

Jaylon frowned, thinking that she was going to threaten him again like last night.

Just as he was about to say something, he saw Reina walk to the middle of the road.

Behind her, a truck full of goods was speeding over.

She smiled at him, her voice so soft that it was almost inaudible, "Real death seems to be much simpler than planning a perfect escape."

Chapter 454

Chapter 454

Chapter 454 Because I Hate You

The blood all over Jaylon's body rushed to the top of his head in an instant. In the warning of the ear-piercing trumpet of the truck, he suddenly pounced on Reina, wanting to push her away.

However, Reina was already prepared. When he pounced over, she quickly dodged and returned to the sidewalk where she had just been standing.

Jaylon missed, his body uncontrollably fell toward the opposite side and heavily fell to the ground.

The truck whistled past the two, bringing with it the sound of the wind.

Jaylon's expensive suit was stained with dust. The part of his elbows and knees wore out the fabric. Bright red blood oozed out of his palms and mixed with the sand on the ground. He looked a little embarrassed.

Reina walked over and looked down at him.

They had known each other for more than two years. This was the first time that she arrogantly looked at him in such a sorry state.

She knew that he loved her. Perhaps she had doubts before, but now she was completely sure.

At the same time, she also clearly realized that this was the only weapon she had that could contend with him.

"Jaylon, move out of my house today.

"You are forcing me again. The next time I stand here, I won't hide."

"Reina, I have already annulled the engagement with Nadia." Jaylon's voice was a little hoarse.

"I'll marry you, and I have shut up all the people who once talked about you behind your back.

"Why do you still refuse to forgive me?"

Reina said calmly, "Because I hate you."

She hated his arrogance, and she hated his disdain and contempt for her even more.

She was just an ordinary person. After following him around the upper society, her pride had already been trampled and she suffered so much.

He never respected her. He was autocratic and stubborn. If she went back, she would just be walking the same old path.

Jaylon's eyelashes trembled slightly. "Reina."

Reina left, not giving him the chance to continue speaking.

When Jaylon returned to the hotel he rented, Trenton and the others saw his dirty clothes and widened their eyes in shock.

Trenton came forward. "Jaylon, have you been plotted against? Who did it?"

"I fell on the way back."

"What?"

Jaylon did not respond and returned to his room alone.

Reina returned home at noon and did not see Jaylon. She was finally relieved.

She called Argus and asked if he wanted to come back for dinner later so that she could prepare together.

Argus said that he went back to his parents and would not come back for dinner. He asked about Jaylon's situation and then hung up the phone.

After hanging up the phone, Argus's mother, Sally Ochoa, continued the topic just now. "Is the foreign man who has been looking for Reina in the nearby town these days Reina's husband?"

Argus corrected, "It's not her husband. They are not married."

"I heard from the other ladies that the man brought a lot of people over." Sally sat down on the single sofa next to him, looking uneasy.

"If he knows that we are coveting Reina's assets, I'm afraid it will be bad for us. Don't go out to sea in the afternoon. Go directly to Reina's house and bring back all your things."

Reina had just arrived in this small town and bought a house in the town. Her friend also gave her a car worth 40 thousand dollars.

This kind of wealth was already considered a rich family in this seaside town.

Moreover, Reina did not go out to work, but she always had money. The people in the town guessed that she should have a lot of savings.

Although she explained that she relied on the translation to support herself, Sally did not believe it.

She had met Reina's friend once before. Just the outfit alone was enough to buy half of the house in their town.

She was a rich single girl, who was beautiful. The young men in the town were attracted, and Sally also encouraged Argus to pursue her.

Later, when the news that Reina was pregnant spread out, all the men who originally pursued her gave up, and the town began to spread some bad rumors about her.

Sally felt that this was a good opportunity, so she spread the rumors and said that the child in Reina's belly was Argus's.

Reina explained to the people in the beginning, trying to clarify this matter.

But it was easy to make a rumor, and it was difficult to refute it.

The people in the town talked about them every day, and coupled with Argus' meticulous care for her, Reina gradually softened and acquiesced in the rumors in the town. She began to try to accept Argus.

Not long ago, Argus moved into Reina's house, and originally, Sally had already begun planning the marriage between them.

But now that the father of the child in her belly had come to find her, Argus probably had no hope.

It was good to stop early, so as to save time.

When his mother finished speaking, Argus hesitantly said, "But I don't want Reina to be with that man."

Sally's face fell. "Don't tell me that you like that woman.

"She is pregnant with someone else's child! Is it appropriate for you, a man who has never been married, to compete with the original boyfriend for a pregnant woman?"

Argus had always had a good temper. He would listen to whatever Sally said, but today he was a little impatient. "I will deal with this matter myself."

"You deal with it yourself? How do you plan to deal with it?" said Sally, raising her voice.

"Reina is pregnant with someone else's child. The father of the child has come to find her. If you go after her now, people in town will laugh at you!"

"You are not allowed to go back to Reina's place today. Otherwise, I will go to negotiate with Reina myself and let her stay away from you."

Argus was a little angry, and his handsome face wrinkled together. "Didn't you ask me to go after her?"

Sally said sternly, "The situation is different now. In short, you are not allowed to go to her house tonight."

Argus was dissatisfied with his mother being imperious, but in this family, they had to listen to her. He could only do as his mother told him.

In the evening, Reina received a call from Argus, saying that Sally was not feeling well these days. He needed to take care of her at home for some time, so he would not come over.

Reina also wanted to be alone and quiet, so she did not ask more and only told him to take good care of his mother.

Reina finished her dinner alone and went into the study to continue working.

After sending out the translated documents, she turned off her computer and found a horror movie to watch before going to sleep.

The next morning, she got up and drew open the curtains.

She was stunned when she saw the rose plants, balls of embroidery flowers, and a European white swing by the flower bed.

In her courtyard, there have only been a few green potted plants and no such things at all.

The flowers in the courtyard were most likely from Jaylon.

The fragrance of the flowers floated up to the second floor in the wind.

Reina looked at it for a while, then pulled the curtains to cover the scenery outside.

Those flowers were indeed very beautiful, but unfortunately, she was allergic to flowers.

#Chapter 455

Chapter 455

Chapter 455

Chapter 455 I Won't Ignore Your Feelings Anymore

After washing up, she went downstairs and found that the room had been cleaned. Breakfast was already on the dining table.

The breakfast was still steaming, and it was obvious that the person who had prepared it had just left not long ago.

Reina walked to the dining table and took a look.

Raw fish slices.

The food she hated the most.

All the things Jaylon prepared were exactly what she disliked. For a moment, she did not know if he was doing this for her good or if he was hoping that she would die soon.

She did not touch the food. She heated a glass of milk and ate some bread. She put on a mask to avoid breathing in pollen and went out for a walk.

The morning sea breeze was very gentle, and there were not many pedestrians on the side of the road.

The light golden sunlight passed through the tall palm tree, casting a cold blue shadow on the tree down. The background was dyed pink by the decomposing light, and the whole picture was as beautiful as an oil painting.

Reina was tired and sat down on a long chair by the road.

There was an SUV parked not far away. Although she could not see the person inside the car, Reina could guess who the person in the car was.

It seemed that what she said to Jaylon yesterday worked.

It would be better if he could dig up those allergies in the courtyard. She closed her eyes and enjoyed the wind. A shadow hung over her head.

She thought it was Jaylon. When she opened her eyes, she saw Argus.

"I wanted to send you home, but I just went over and didn't see you." He gave her a sandwich.

Sally asked him not to see Reina for the next few days and wait for the matter between Reina and Jaylon to be settled.

However, he was worried about Reina and could not help but come to see her.

Reina looked up at him and asked, "How is Ms. Ochoa? Is she seriously ill?"

When she mentioned his mother's illness, Argus's eyes dodged.

Sallie was not sick, and this was just a lie that Sally asked Argus to tell.

"There should be no big problem. She will recover in a few days."

Reina was quiet for a few seconds, then suddenly laughed, "Is that so? Then bring my best wishes to her."

Argus nodded and said, "I still have to go out to sea. I'll be leaving first." "Okay."

After Argus left, the smile on Reina's face quickly disappeared.

Argus was simple-minded and did not know how to lie. Everything was shown on his face.

Sally should not have been sick.

Argus avoided her probably because of the appearance of Jaylon. His family began to care about her pregnancy again.

When she first found out that she was pregnant, she thought of aborting the child.

This child was evidence of her humiliation in the past. If she gave birth to this child, her future life would undoubtedly become even more difficult.

A single mother with a child could not live without hardship.

But she couldn't bear to abort this child.

She had been almost desperate for life before. Even with a new life and a new beginning, she was still depressed. She even suffered slight depression.

Occasionally, she even thought about dying.

The appearance of this child gave her new support.

If Argus's family could not accept her and her child, she had no intention of pestering them.

She did not care if she could get married. It was enough for her to have this child.

She opened the protective film wrapped around the sandwich and was ready to eat a little.

Halfway through unwrapping the protective film, a large hand suddenly reached out, grabbed the sandwich Argus gave her, and threw it directly into the trash can on the side.

Reina raised her eyes, her pretty face frowning. "Mr. Malpas, what are you doing?"

Jaylon was calm and steady. His handsome face was indifferent. He was thin and had a good posture. The bright light in the morning was shining around, making him more attractive.

He said in a low voice, "I prepared breakfast for you, but you didn't eat it." There were no changes in his tone, but Reina somehow heard a trace of the complaint.

Reina said, "I don't like fish."

"You don't like fish, but you chose to live in a seaside town?" Jaylon did not believe her explanation.

"Fish is not the only food here."

She chose this place only because the scenery here was pleasant.

Jaylon said, "I remember that you used to eat fish. I took you to the seafood restaurant and you also ate it."

Reina smiled cynically, "The first time I went to the seafood restaurant with you, I told you that I didn't like to eat seafood. You didn't care about it at that time, and now you probably forgot about it.

"As for why I ate so much later...

"It was your treat. If I acted like I had no appetite, wouldn't it affect your appetite?

"You spent money to buy service from me. I naturally have to do everything well."

Jaylon was speechless.

Back then, Reina was hired by him. He spent money, so naturally, everything was based on his feelings. He rarely cared about Reina's thoughts.

Now that Reina mentioned it, other than realizing how much of a bastard he was back then, he couldn't remember when such a thing had happened.

He was silent for a while and promised, "I won't ignore your feelings."

Reina stood up from the chair. "A person's character won't change easily. I can say thousands of vows in a day.

"However, you and I don't seem to have any stories and there is no need to make promises."

She raised her leg and left. Jaylon wanted to follow, but he was worried that she would do something extreme like yesterday, so he could only endure for a while.

When Reina returned home, she took off her mask and took out her phone to send a message to Argus, telling him to come over and take his things away after he was done with work today.

She had been hesitant to accept Argus because of the child in her belly, as well as the past experiences that made her feel ashamed and inferior.

A while ago, Argus did not mind this and expressed that his family did not mind, so she tried to accept him.

But now that his family cared about the existence of the child in her belly and Jaylon, she'd better not worry them.

Argus was probably busy right now and did not reply.

Reina wanted a lot of sleep after she was pregnant. Before she received a reply, she went upstairs to sleep.

In her sleep, she felt like her nose and mouth were blocked by something, and she could not breathe.

When she woke up, her respiratory tract was blocked and she could only breathe through her mouth.

Her head was dizzy and her throat felt like it was being burned by fire. She also felt nauseous and wanted to vomit.

She could not be more familiar with these symptoms.

She was allergic.

Reina picked up the phone that was placed at the bedside and glanced at it.

At noon, Argus seemed to have sent her a message.

At this moment, her eyes were a little itchy and her vision was blurry.

She did not look at the chat content sent by Argus and directly sent him the text transferred from a voice message.

"I seem to be allergic. Can you take me to the hospital?"

There was only a clinic in the town and no ambulance. She could only ask Argus for help.

After the voice text was transferred, she sent it out without checking the typos.

After about two minutes, the bedroom door was kicked open.

Chapter 456

Chapter 456 Allergic

When Jaylon came in, Reina had already grabbed a new mask from the bedside cabinet and put it on.

Seeing Jaylon at the bedroom door, Reina was a little surprised.

"Why is it you?"

Her throat was in a lot of pain and her voice was hoarse.

Jaylon strode over and picked her up. "You just sent me a text message."

Only then did Reina realize that she had sent the wrong person the text message.

"Put me down. I didn't text you."

She struggled slightly, but Jaylon's steady and powerful arm was like an iron wall. It was unable for her to break free.

Jaylon carried her downstairs. He was serious as he whispered, "Don't make a sound."

Now was not the time to cause trouble. Reina soon stopped talking and quietly shrank in his arms.

There was no medicine for pollen allergy in the clinic in the town, so Jaylon drove her to the hospital in the city.

It was a long journey, and it was more than an hour later when Jaylon's car arrived at the hospital.

At this time, Reina had already fainted. Jaylon had asked Trenton to contact the doctor on the way. Now that he arrived, he directly entered the doctor's office.

After a long time, it was only when Reina was transferred to the ward that Jaylon finally calmed down.

When Reina woke up, it was already evening.

The man beside the bed quietly watched her. There was no sound, but his tense lips seemed particularly thin, giving people a sharp and indifferent feeling.

"Do you want to drink water?"

Reina made a sound of "hmm", her voice dry and hoarse, like a traveler who hadn't drunk in the desert for a few days.

Jaylon took out a straw from the drawer, opened it, inserted it into the water cup, and poured a cup of warm water for her.

After Reina drank water, he asked again, "What do you want to eat for dinner?"

Reina said with a hoarse voice, "I don't have any appetite right now."

"The doctor said that you are allergic to pollen. Why didn't you tell me this morning?" Jaylon lowered his voice as if he was blaming himself.

In order to please her, he had planted the flowers in her courtyard at night.

This morning, she talked to him, but she didn't talk about her pollen allergy.

If he had known about this, he would have asked someone to dig up all the flowers in the morning. He wouldn't have caused her to be diagnosed with an allergy.

Reina's answer was simple and straightforward. "I don't want to tell you."

She had planned to find someone to help her dig up all the flowers in the yard when she woke up, but she was allergic to them the moment she woke up.

She guessed that the window was not closed, and the wind brought the pollen into the house.

Jaylon lightly reprimanded, "You are still angry with me? Who was the one to be harmed in the end? Huh?"

Reina's good-looking eyes stared at him calmly. "You brought the pollen to my house, but now you are blaming me for not telling you about my pollen allergy?"

"This and I don't like sashimi. I told you in the past."

Probably because she realized that she was being unreasonable, she did not say the rest.

Other people had no obligation to remember her preferences. She did not say it herself, so in fact, she could not blame anyone.

However, when she became emotional, she could not control herself.

She turned over and lay down, not saying a word.

The ward was quiet for a long time, and the person beside the bed softly said, "I'm sorry."

Reina did not respond and closed her eyes to sleep.

At midnight, Reina began to feel a little hungry.

She wanted to order takeout, but she didn't know where the phone was. She had to call Jaylon, "Do you know where the phone is?"

"It's with me."

This afternoon, he sent someone to take the phone over.

However, Reina did not want it, so he did not give it to her.

He handed the phone over and casually asked, "What are you going to do?"

"Order takeout."

"I got someone to prepare dinner."

"I don't want to eat the food you prepared."

If she accepted his kindness, she would always feel that she owed him something.

In the future, when he made some requests, she might be soft-hearted because of his favor.

If she wanted to draw a clear line with him, it would become even more difficult.

Jaylon's feelings were a little complicated and he didn't say anything else.

Reina checked her phone and saw a few missed calls and a dozen text messages.

The texts asked her why she suddenly wanted her to move out. Later, probably because she didn't reply, they called her.

Her phone was in silent mode, so there was no sound from her phone, and no one took it.

The phone calls did not go through, and they also texted her, saying that Jaylon was not in town. They asked her if she had left with Jaylon, and then asked if she had been kidnapped. If there was no news tomorrow, they said they would call the police.

After reading the messages, Reina replied to them.

"I was hospitalized. My phone was in silent mode and I didn't see your message. Sorry."

Less than half a minute after the message was sent, Argus called.

He had probably been staring at his phone all this time, which was why his reaction was so fast.

The call went through, and Argus's anxious voice came. "Reina, what's wrong with you? Did Jaylon hurt you? Where are you now? Are you seriously ill?"

He had so many questions. Reina answered, "I inhaled pollen. Jaylon sent me to the hospital in the city at noon today. I had fluids in the afternoon, so I'm much better now."

Jaylon was sitting on the sofa opposite the bed. Although he couldn't hear the voice on the other side of the line, he guessed that it was Argus.

In fact, he noticed that Argus had called in the afternoon. He deliberately didn't remind Reina because he was worried that she would call Argus.

If she had asked Argus to come and take care of her, then there would be nothing for him to do here.

In the end, he still couldn't hide it.

When Argus heard Reina finish speaking, he heaved a sigh of relief and asked, "Which hospital are you in? I'll come over right now."

Reina paused and said, "I have someone to take care of me here. You don't have to come over."

Hearing her say that she didn't need Argus to come over, Jaylon calmly looked up.

Reina noticed his gaze and covered the microphone on her phone. She said to Jaylon, "You go out for a while."

Jaylon did not want to make her angry again. Although he was curious about the conversation between her and Argus, he still walked out.

Argus heard the alienation in her tone and remembered that Reina asked him to move out of her house this morning. He was a little depressed.

"Reina, are you planning to leave with Jaylon? You promised..."

"Argus, you moved back first yesterday." Reina interrupted him.

Her tone was serious and Argus felt a little guilty. He felt that she seemed to have noticed something. "I just had something to deal with at home and had to leave."

"I asked your neighbor. Ms. Ochoa was never sick. If you want to leave, you don't have to lie to me. Tell me the truth, and I won't keep pestering you." Before Argus pursued her, she had no intention of getting married. After all, she had a child in her belly, and ordinary men would not accept her.

If Argus did not want to marry her, she would not say anything.

Chapter 457

Chapter 457

Chapter 457 Stepfather

"I never thought of leaving. It was only because of Jaylon's appearance that my family said that he was the child's father. You might leave with Jaylon, so they let me go home first," Argus hurriedly explained.

When he first approached Reina, he did have other purposes, but after three months of getting along with her, he really liked her.

However, the child in her belly had always been a hurdle in his heart. He pretended not to care before, but in fact, he still had some grudges.

After all, no man would be willing to marry a pregnant woman.

And when Jaylon appeared as the child's father, the reluctance in his heart became even greater.

He needed time to sort out his emotions. Also, because of his mother, Sally, he simply moved home to calm down.

He had not thought about what to do next for the time being, but he was certain that he liked Reina and did not want to give up.

"Your family asked you to go home. You went back, and then what? Argus, in fact, you don't like the child in my belly. You don't want to accept her, do you?"

In her current situation, she never dared to hope for love.

The reason why she wanted to marry Argus was also very simple. All she wanted was for someone to stay with her and the child.

If Argus could not accept the child in her belly, and even because of this child, he chose to escape when she needed him the most. She would rather be alone.

It was not that she could not live without a man, and she didn't mind getting married either.

Argus did not know how to respond.

He wanted to say that he did not mind, but he could not say it.

After waiting for a few seconds without an answer, Reina no longer stubbornly asked him. "It's getting late now. You should rest. Let's talk about it another day."

She did not blame Argus for this matter. Argus's reaction was just the reaction of a normal man.

However, based on the current situation, there was no need for the two of them to continue talking.

Whether it was this phone call or marriage.

Argus's heart was also in a mess right now. He told her to rest well before ending the call.

After hanging up the phone, Reina opened the delivery software to order food.

After a good while, Jaylon walked in from outside.

His eyes stared straight at her. "Why didn't you let Argus come over? Didn't you say he was your boyfriend?"

He thought for a moment and concluded, "Were you lying to me before?"

"I have no obligation to answer you. You are not going back tonight?" Reina glanced at him.

"I'll stay here with you."

"I don't need your company."

Jaylon didn't reply. He ended the conversation unilaterally.

As always, he made his decision without caring about her and stayed. After dinner, Reina picked up her phone again. "How much is the consultation fee? I'll transfer it to you."

Jaylon did not want her money, but seeing that she insisted, he finally took out his phone and said a number.

The medical fee in this country was two or three times that of America. In addition, this was a private hospital. Jaylon made an appointment with a very good doctor. The fee was several times more expensive than the ordinary hospitals in America.

After the money was transferred, Reina didn't have much left in her account.

Today, the doctor said that she might have to stay in the hospital for three to four days. The money in her account might not be enough.

The next day, Reina went to apply for a transfer.

However, Jaylon had already informed the hospital. The hospital did not agree.

Reina had no choice but to return to the ward.

Jaylon guessed what she had done. He looked at her and did not speak.

Reina said, "I will return your money to you later."

"No need. You have already paid more than half of the money. The rest of the money I paid is to save our child's life."

The consultation fee for the first day is expensive, and it will be cheaper for medicine later.

Reina said coldly, "I said that the child is not yours."

"Yes, not mine."

He didn't refute and Reina didn't know what to say now.

Reina held her breath and went back to the bed to lie down.

Jaylon continued calmly, "Although he is not my child, I don't mind being his stepfather."

Reina ignored him and opened the audiobook app to listen to the news.

At noon, the door of the ward was knocked open.

Charles ran in from outside and called Reina.

Reina was in a bad mood for the whole morning. When she saw Charles, she instantly felt much better. She called out to him in surprise, "Charles?"

The little fellow had a good relationship with Reina. Yesterday, he went to find her but did not see her. He was sad for a long time. Today, he finally saw her. He wanted to jump directly onto Reina's arms.

In fact, he did do the same.

However, before he jumped onto the bed, Jaylon picked him up by the collar and put him 3 feet away from the bed.

Charles's resentful eyes fell on Jaylon. He wanted to curse him.

After comparing their height and strength, Charles silently quit.

Forget it, I can't beat him.

When I grow up, I will fight him one on one.

Jaylon acted as if he did not understand the little guy's look and scolded,

"Her body has not recovered yet. Be good."

"Oh." The little guy responded indifferently. He walked past Jaylon to the bedside and jumped up with his hands on the edge of the bed. He sat on the bed. His chubby little face was full of worry. "Reina, why are you sick? Is it very serious?"

"It's not serious. It's just an allergy." Reina smiled and rubbed the little guy's head. "Why are you here? Have you told your parents?"

"This man helped me tell them. This man said that you hated him and didn't want to play with him. He asks me to accompany you." Charles lay his head on Reina's hands.

Reina smiled slightly. Jaylon didn't deny what Charles said and walked out of the room.

"I'm going out for a walk. You guys can talk."

He felt that Reina would always be unhappy when he was present. It was better to give her space.

After Jaylon left, Charles went over and held Reina's arm. "Reina, why didn't you tell Argus that you were sick?"

"I wanted to tell Argus about this in the morning, but that man didn't allow me,"

Reina pinched his chubby little face. "Because I don't want Argus to worry. Don't tell him when you go back today, okay?"

"Okay." Charles agreed immediately. Then, he took off his backpack and took out a small cloth bag. "Reina, my Mommy made you cookies. Have a taste. It's delicious."

Reina opened the cloth bag and picked up a small cookie to put into her mouth. Charles stared at her with sparkling eyes, looking forward to her

"Reina, is it delicious?"

"It's delicious." Reina nodded.

Charles smiled and asked, "Reina, I heard that there is a lot of delicious food in America. Can you tell me what you like to eat?"

Reina nodded and told Charles about the dishes she liked. She also introduced a few anecdotes that she knew.

Charles took out a small notebook and carefully recorded them one by one.

Reina saw that he was so serious and could not help but laugh, "Why do you write them down? Do you want to go back and learn how to cook?"

Charles nodded and shook his head.

There was indeed someone who wanted to learn how to cook, but it was not him.

He just worked hard for ten lollipops.

Chapter 458

Chapter 458

Chapter 458 End This

The little fellow shook his head for a while and then nodded. Reina could not figure out what he was thinking and continued to talk to him about the delicacies of America.

Reina did not have any takeout at noon. Charles brought cookies over today. Reina chatted while eating. Soon, she was full.

Charles played in the room for the whole afternoon. It was not until dusk that Jaylon asked someone to send him back.

After Jaylon entered the ward, Reina immediately put away the smile on her face. She lay down on the bed and found a novel to listen to.

Jaylon did not disturb her and quietly sat to the side to deal with business.

Charles was sent home by Jaylon's people.

Argus thought about it for the entire night and still could not let go of Reina, so he decided to give it a try with her.

He called Reina this morning and wanted to ask which hospital she was in, but Reina never answered his call.

He couldn't get through. Today, he was absent-minded when he was working.

On the boat, he heard that Charles seemed to have been taken out by Jaylon's people today, so he went to Charles' house to wait for Charles.

As soon as the little guy came back, Argus pulled him and asked, "Do you know which hospital Reina is in?"

Charles said honestly, "I know."

Argus quickly asked, "What's the name of that hospital?"

"I agreed with Reina that I can't tell you about this."

"Ten lollipops."

"But..." Charles hesitated.

"Twenty lollipops."

"Reina won't let me."

"Thirty."

Charles was silent.

He walked to the side, found a piece of paper and a pen, wrote something on it, and then threw it on the sofa opposite him.

"Oh, I think I dropped something."

"The secret of me and Reina is written on it."

Argus saw what he meant and walked over to pick up the paper. Sure enough, the location of Reina's Hospital was written on it.

He threw the paper into the trash can, turned around, and walked out.

"Argus, lollipops." Charles ran to stop him.

Argus took the little fellow's hand away and tried to persuade him, "I have something urgent to attend to. I'll come back tomorrow to give it to you."

After saying that, he strode away.

Charles pouted.

Despicable man.

Reina had already closed the audiobook app and was about to go to sleep. When she heard that there seemed to be someone calling her name outside, she sat up from the bed.

"I think I heard Argus's voice."

Jaylon also heard it.

He closed the computer and got up to go out to check.

Reina said, "Don't hurt him. Let him in."

She was too clear on how short-tempered Jaylon was.

Argus was just an ordinary guy. Now that he came, Jaylon might even kill him.

"Am I so evil in your eyes?" Jaylon frowned.

He did do some bad things in the past, but those were the people who had conflicts with him in business.

Argus did not provoke him, so he would not hurt him.

"Do you think you are a noble guy?" Reina asked.

"You know what you have done before."

In the few months she followed Jaylon, she had seen how he dealt with his competitors.

The business world was like a battlefield. She didn't feel that there was anything wrong with his methods. After all, it was his business and his opponents could resist.

But if he dealt with the ordinary people she knew, they might be ruined for the rest of her life.

Jaylon looked at her for a few seconds and walked out of the ward.

Argus was less than 15 feet to the right of the door when he was stopped by Trenton and the others.

When Trenton saw Jaylon come out, he shouted respectfully, "Jaylon."

"Let go of him and let him in." Jaylon raised his hand.

"Yes."

The two men holding Argus immediately let him go.

Argus tidied up his messy clothes and looked at Jaylon with his clear blue eyes. "Reina asked you to invite me in?"

From Jaylon's point of view, Argus's question was like showing off how important he was to Reina.

Jaylon did not answer and turned back to the ward.

If it weren't because Reina might go crazy like she did yesterday morning, Jaylon wanted to throw Argus out of the corridor.

When he entered the ward, Argus saw the small red pimples on Reina's face and asked, "Haven't you recovered from your allergy?"

Reina said, "Tomorrow should be fine. Today, I'm much better than yesterday."

Argus asked about her situation for the past two days and wanted to continue the topic with Reina about last night. However, because Jaylon was here, he never found a chance to speak.

Argus could not hide his thoughts. Seeing that he was always looking at Jaylon, Reina guessed Argus' thoughts. She said to Jaylon, "You go out. I have something to say to Argus."

"If you have something to say, say it in front of me." Jaylon did not move. Reina fell silent. She lifted the quilt and got off the bed.

She didn't have much strength. The moment her feet touched the ground, she almost fell.

Jaylon's eyelids jumped and he wanted to go over and help her.

Before he could touch Reina, Argus had already walked over and grabbed Reina's shoulder, letting her stand against him. He asked with concern, "Are you alright?"

"Why did you suddenly get out of bed?" Jaylon's gaze fell on Argus, who was holding her hand.

Reina said expressionlessly, "Since Mr. Malpas refuses to leave, then Argus and I will go out."

Her tone and eyes were like sharp thorns, stabbing into his heart.

Therefore, he couldn't stay anymore.

Now Reina was emotional, so he did not dare to provoke her.

"You lie back in bed. I'll go out."

After saying that, he left without looking back.

Reina lay back on the bed and Argus said, "Reina, I thought it through last night. I still like you.

"For you, I am willing to accept the child in your belly."

If Argus had given her this answer last night, Reina might have been able to convince herself to forget about this little thing this time and get along with him like before, waiting to get married.

But his hesitation last night made her realize that he could not accept her child from the bottom of his heart.

This was not his child after all.

"Argus, you don't have to force yourself. I know you can't accept him, and I don't want to force you with a child.

"Let's end our relationship."

Argus didn't expect Reina to not give him any room for negotiation. He was disappointed and painful. "Reina, my strange behavior two days ago was only because the appearance of Jaylon disrupted our peaceful life. I have thought it through now and decided to keep going with you. "I am willing to try to accept this child. Why can't you give me another chance?"

Chapter 459

Chapter 459

Chapter 459 Provocation

"Argus, you are still young and have many choices. I don't want you to regret it." Reina still insisted on her own opinion.

"You are a man who has never been married. If you marry me who has a child, you will inevitably be criticized.

"Even if you can accept this child now, what about the future? Are you sure that you can always stay rational under public criticism and love me and the child?

"I was careless before and easily decided to marry you. I am here to say sorry to you. What compensation do you want? I can try my best to satisfy you.

"But we are indeed not suitable for each other. Let's forget about dating."

Seeing that she had made up her mind, Argus sat down on a chair beside him in frustration, not saying a word.

He suddenly hated himself. Why did he leave Reina and return home because of his mother's words?

It was because of his hesitation in the past few days that they, who should have been happy together, split up.

Reina continued, "Argus, go back now. You have to go out to sea tomorrow. Don't delay your work."

Argus was silent for a long time and asked for her opinion, "Can I stay here tonight?"

"I can't be at ease leaving Jaylon and you here."

Jaylon and Reina used to be a couple. Argus was worried that if things continued like this, he would be eliminated.

He still wanted to fight for Reina.

Reina said, "You better go back."

Since she had decided to break up with him, there was no reason for her to give him hope.

It was extremely cruel to shatter hope after giving others hope.

She could not do it.

Argus wanted to say something, yet in the end, he left.

Walking to the door, Jaylon waited there.

He leaned against the wall with a cigarette between his fingers. His cold, handsome face was blurred in the smoke. He was surrounded by faint gloom.

Hearing the sound at the door, he glanced sideways, put out the cigarette, and said in a calm voice, "You were kicked out?"

There were no ups and downs in his tone, but Argus could hear a hint of ridicule in his voice.

Not to be outdone, Argus said composedly with a stony face, "Reina said that she was afraid that you would hurt me, so she asked me to go back first. When she is discharged, she will come to me."

Reina was protecting the blue-eyed fisherman again.

Jaylon was enraged, yet his face remained calm. He threw the cigarette butt into the trash can and slowly walked up to Argus. Jaylon's voice was sullen and icy. "Then you can wait and see if she will have a chance to come to you after she is discharged from the hospital."

Argus was about the same height as Jaylon. When Argus straightened his back, he also looked imposing. Argus said unhurriedly, "If you are not afraid that she will be forced to death, you can try."

This sentence directly touched a nerve.

What Argus said was what Jaylon was most scared of right now.

Jaylon could directly take Reina away, but he knew that Reina could no longer withstand his torment. This was why he had been carefully guarding her, not daring to overstep his boundaries.

The tip of Jaylon's tongue was pressed against the back of his teeth, his eyes becoming increasingly angry. "You better pray that Reina can always protect you."

"She will protect me for the rest of her life. After all, she is my future wife," Argus smiled provocatively.

After saying that, he walked around Jaylon and left.

Jaylon stood there for a long time. Trenton was about to call him when he saw Jaylon punch the wall fast and ruthlessly and leave a blood mark.

The people standing next to him were all shocked. Trenton quickly sent for a doctor and then walked to Jaylon. "Jaylon, if you are angry with that Argus, you can hit him. Why did you have to do this?"

The joints connected Jaylon's palm and fingers were covered in blood. His hand was still tightly clenched as he laughed at himself.

"Reina is protecting him. How would I dare to hit him?"

Reina wanted to marry Argus now. If he killed her fiancé, she might threaten him with her life again.

Trenton did not understand things between Jaylon and Reina, so Trenton did not say anything else.

The doctor brought the tools over and helped Jaylon bandage his wound in the corridor before going back home to rest.

Jaylon walked back to the ward. Reina noticed the wound on his hand. She only glanced at it indifferently before closing her eyes and falling asleep.

Jaylon deliberately let the doctor wrap his wound with thicker and wider gauze so that Reina could see it.

In the end, she did see it.

However, she did not say a word of concern.

When Argus arrived an hour ago and Jaylon had not even touched Argus, Reina told Jaylon not to hurt Argus.

The man who was already suppressing his anger became even more upset. He took off his coat and fell asleep on the bed beside Reina.

Reina had thought that after the conversation last night, Argus would not come to find her for a while.

She did not expect that the next day, Argus would bring Charles to the hospital.

Yesterday, Jaylon did not let anyone stop Argus, so Argus came in today smoothly.

Jaylon sat on the sofa, reading the news. When he saw Argus enter, the vibe around Jaylon instantly soured.

If Reina were not here, Jaylon would probably throw Argus out directly.

Charles originally wanted to greet Jaylon, who had given him candy, but Charles was frightened by Jaylon's expression and did not dare to approach Jaylon.

"Reina, do you want to eat candy?" The little fellow took out a few pieces of candy from his bag and gave them to Reina.

There was no reason for him to be so attentive, so he must be up to no good.

Reina asked Charles, "Did you tell Argus about my hospital?"

"Reina, sometimes it's not good to be so smart." Charles flinched.

"Don't do it again next time." Reina flicked a finger on his head.

"OK!"

Argus brought lunch over today. He placed the lunch box on the table and opened it layer by layer.

He took out the dish in the middle and put it on the table, saying, "Reina, you need to nourish your body when you're pregnant. It's not good to eat takeout every day. I've made your favorite dishes. Have a taste."

Argus had been depressed the entire night after he went back last night, yet he had cheered up today.

Jaylon still didn't know about Reina breaking up with him, and Reina didn't seem to want Jaylon to know this fact. She definitely wouldn't mention it in front of Jaylon.

Jaylon could take care of Reina as her boyfriend. Also, he could please her and prevent Jaylon from getting closer to Reina without him knowing. He could kill three birds with one stone.

Sure enough, in front of Jaylon, Reina did not stubbornly make a clean break with Argus like last night.

"Sorry to trouble you."

Argus casually replied, "I am your fiancé. It is only right for me to do this."

Hearing the word "fiancé", Jaylon looked even more disgruntled. Reina was a little uncomfortable.

She did not know that Argus would be so obstinate.

Argus helped Reina put the table on the bed, placed the food on it, pulled a chair to sit by the bed, and told her about the interesting things that had happened in the small town in the past two days.

Charles exaggeratedly mimed at the side, making Reina laugh several times.

The three of them were enjoying themselves, while Jaylon was sitting alone on the sofa in the corner, silent and sulky.

Charles saw Jaylon staying alone in the corner and said in a crisp voice,

"Reina, Mr. Malpas looks so pitiful alone there. Do you want to pull him over to play with him?"

As he said this, Charles jumped off the bed and planned to talk to Jaylon.

Charles sympathized with Jaylon. However, Charles' words were unpleasant to Jaylon.

Reina glanced at Jaylon and said, "Don't disturb him. He enjoys being alone."

"Oh." Charles rubbed his head and climbed back onto the bed. "Then I won't disturb him. Let's talk quietly."

"I just thought no one was willing to talk to him."

Jaylon was lost for words.

Jaylon thought, the last sentence shouldn't have been said.

Argus and Charles stayed in the sick room for an entire afternoon before leaving at dusk.

For the entire afternoon, Jaylon sat upright in a corner without a moment of relaxation. He looked completely silent and focused.

Jaylon seemed to be focused on his work. But in reality, Jaylon had been listening to the conversation between Reina and Argus.

After Argus and Charles left, Reina lay on the bed and did not speak to Jaylon.

The next day, Jaylon went out in the morning. He only returned when it was close to noon.

Reina neither knew what Jaylon had done nor wanted to know. So, she didn't ask.

At lunchtime, Charles came again.

But this time Charles came alone. Argus didn't come.

Reina asked casually, "Why didn't Argus come today?"

Charles put his Winnie the Pooh bag on the table and said, "His mother heard that he didn't go out to sea yesterday and had been here with you. She was angry and didn't let him go out."

Sally was dissatisfied with Reina because Reina was pregnant. Sally felt that Reina was a little reckless in her personal life, so Reina was pregnant out of wedlock.

Sally did not like Reina, and Reina did not like Sally either. Thus, Reina diverted the topic, "What's in your bag?"

Charles came without anything in the last two days. However, today he seemed to have brought a gift.

Charles unzipped his bag and put the things on the table one by one in order.

He thought, mommy said that we should keep things in order.

Charles opened the lunchbox. They smelt the dishes.

"Argus can't come today. Yet, he still made a meal and let me bring it over."

Charles helped Reina put a small table on the bed and put the dishes on the table.
"Good appetite."

Reina picked up the fork and took one fry to Charles. "Try some!"

Charles shook his head and refused. "I have already eaten at home. You have it."

Charles ate some at home.

Now he had no desire to eat another bite.

Charles thought, it's really hard to earn ten lollipops.

I not only need to take notes but also have to taste the dishes.

I'm only ten years old, and I'm very tired.

Reina did not like forcing others. Since Charles did not eat, she put the food into her mouth.

After just a bite, she frowned.

Jaylon, who was sitting on the sofa, looked away from the laptop screen to look over calmly.

Charles asked, "Reina, is it delicious?"

Reina had a mixed facial expression. "It's a little different from what Argus usually cooks."

Charles said directly, "It tastes bad.

"I already said it was bad. But someone still didn't believe me."

As soon as Charles said this, Jaylon, who was sitting in the corner, looked cold.

The dish was not particularly bad. Yet, it was a bit spicy.

People in this country rarely ate spicy food. Charles could not eat even a little bit of spicy food. This morning, when he was tasting the dishes, Charles almost cried from the spiciness.

Reina frowned just now because she had tasted something unusual about this dish.

The dishes didn't taste like what Argus cooked.

Since Jaylon had disappeared for a whole morning, Reina felt that these dishes might have been made by Jaylon.

Reina thought, in the past two days, Jaylon has always been obedient and careful towards me. He asked Charles to bring the food over, probably because he was worried that if he gave it to me, I might reject him.

If it was the old Jaylon, he would not do this to please me.

After all, he was always arrogant in the past and looked down on men who were trying to please women.

But now, he has made a change for me and carefully catered to me.

Reina had a complicated feeling. She said, "Actually, it's not bad. It doesn't taste bad."

Hearing this, Jaylon didn't look so sullen. He left the mailbox page and started searching for how to make home-cooked dishes.

Jaylon's first try was successful. So, he planned to continue it tomorrow.

Charles only stayed in the sick room for half an hour today. He left after Reina finished her lunch.

Charles was very active. It was already his limit to stay in the sick room for so long in the last two days.

After Charles left, Reina planned to go downstairs for a walk after lunch.

As soon as Reina sat up, Jaylon stood up. "What are you going to do? I'll help you."

In the past two days in the sick room, Jaylon had been paying attention to her movements all the time.

Jaylon would help Reina do anything else other than go to the restroom.

"I'm going down for a walk." Reina got up.

Reina felt that she had almost recovered. Yet the red marks on her body had not disappeared. She needed to stay in the hospital for two more days.

She put on her slippers and slowly walked out.

Jaylon reached out to help her. However, before Jaylon could touch Reina, he silently shrank back.

He thought, she hates me touching her.

Reina noticed his movements and pursed her lips. She asked, "How did you get the wound on your hand?"

This was the first time Reina had cared about Jaylon in the past few days.

Jaylon's cold eyes softened a little. He said, "I hurt myself. It was a small wound."

Reina did not ask further and continued to walk out.

When they went downstairs, Jaylon received an international call from America.

Jaylon looked at the screen and walked to a place where Reina could not hear. Then, he picked up the phone.

The call was from the prison.

The one on the phone said that Lacey had been requesting to call her daughter, Reina, all this time. However, they did not have Reina's phone number, so they called to ask Jaylon.

Jaylon had not mentioned Lacey's imprisonment to Reina. He thought for a moment and decided to ask Reina's opinion first before calling back.

After ending the call, Jaylon returned to Reina. Yet, he couldn't say anything.

Jaylon thought, Lacey is Reina's mother. I sent Lacey to prison without letting Reina know. When Reina knows, she might hate me even more.

Seeing that Jaylon wanted to say something, Reina took the initiative to ask, "What do you want to say?"

Jaylon said, "You have been away from America for so long. Have you ever thought of contacting your mother?"

"No." Reina looked at Jaylon in confusion. "Why are you suddenly talking about this?"

Jaylon pursed his lips tightly and looked grave. "Your mother was imprisoned not long ago."

Reina was a little dazed. She then asked calmly, "What crime?"

"Blackmail, stabbing others, and some minor crimes."
