

Chapter 39 : Anaya Is An Elemental

Anaya was taken to the study and made to sit down on the chair on the other side of his desk but Roman. He sat on his own chair and poured two glasses of water and passed one over to Anaya. After taking the glass, she kept it in her hand without moving. Her brain was working on overdrive from all the information overload.

"Let's calm down first, okay?" He said and gestured for her to drink the water, he himself took a few big gulps and a big sigh.

Anaya brought the glass to her lips and took a few sips. The freshness of water spread throughout her. The messy things going on in her mind were swept clean and gradually everything became calm. Anaya was once again taken by surprise what wonder a small amount of water can do. It always fascinated her.

After a few sips Anaya kept the glass back on the desk and her hands went on her lap, waiting for Roman to speak. She had calmed down a lot.

Seeing that Anaya was back in the right state of mind, Roman was relieved. He didn't want to give her so many shocks while she was already confused but now it was necessary for her to know. Charlotte and Logan were already training with their elements and soon Anaya will have to start too.

Also, Roman wanted to make their relationship clear. It was about time.

Roman took a deep breath and said, "I have two important things to discuss with you today. Both are extremely important. First listen to what I have to say and then if you have any questions, I'll answer them all."

Anaya nodded. She was waiting to know what he had to discuss with her. It couldn't be too important because Anaya wasn't an important person. If it was something concerning towards Blue Stone then she will advice Alpha Roman to speak directly with Alpha Clark.

Because she didn't know the content of this meeting, Anaya was feeling nervous and calm at the same time. It was a different sensation in her tummy that made her want to stand up and shake it off.

"Okay, so first let me ask you - Do you know anything about Elementals?"

Anaya shook her head. She didn't know anything about Elementals but she recently found out that Charlotte was one. And probably her dead brother too. That's what made them special right? So special that compared to them Anaya was a discarded piece of garbage.

Roman understood so he decided to first explain the concept of Elementals. It was highly necessary to first know what they are before revealing that she is a water elemental. If he were to say that she's an Elemental before knowing what it really is, she might have a series of reactions which may cause the end of this discussion. Roman had to do it carefully.

"The Elementals are people who possess the power of the five natural elements on earth - Fire, Water, Air, Wood and Earth. The five elements have their own strength and are unique in their own way. Since there are five elements, there are only five Elementals as well. Each of the Elementals have one element power. For example, Charlotte has fire as her element, so she can use fire in different ways to protect herself or attack someone. The elemental can use their elements in various ways." Roman explained as simply as he could, "Did you understand that?"

Anaya once again nodded. She did understand. In fact, the concept of Elementals sounded very interesting to Anaya.

Someone so powerful really existed in their world? It didn't sound real at all. To be able to control fire was an extremely cool thing to do. No wonder Charlotte was given so much importance.

Roman was relieved that he was going in the right direction. Now that Anaya knew what an Elemental is, he just had to tell her that she's a water Elemental.

However, before he could say it, he saw the strange expression on her face. It looked a lot like self mocking.

"What are you thinking?" Roman asked.

Anaya looked up a little, her hair made a shadow on her face which made it look a lot more gloomy than it originally was. She held her cold hands under the table and squeezed her thumbs together.

"Alpha," Anaya said in a small voice, "Is Charlotte really an Elemental?"

It sounded like a very normal question, after all Anaya did not know about this. Roman nodded.

"Yes, she's a fire Elemental. But she has a lot more to learn, she is still at the very early stage. She was taught nothing at Blue Stone pack." Roman answered in a slightly bitter tone.

"So, isn't she really very special?" Anaya said, "Earlier you said that Charlotte isn't special. But if she is someone with such a cool power then the pack was right love her so much. Do you know she was treated like a princess back home?"

Now Roman didn't know what to say to that. He was prepared to tell her that she was a water elemental but first he had to remove the image of Charlotte from her mind.

"Charlotte is not special because anything she can do with her powers is what I or any other warrior from my pack can do without those powers." Roman explained, "Having additional powers does not make anyone special Anaya. It's just the nature of people who put some people above others. If not for them, everyone is more or less the same."

How can they be same? Anaya thought. She couldn't get her head around any of it. She reached out and took a big gulp of water again to calm her messy nerves. Once again like a wave, the water washed away the mess in Anaya's head.

"That would be nice." Anaya said, "If everyone was the same."

How Roman really wished they were. But uniformity was very hard to find in the world.

"Anaya, now you know known what an Elemental is. I've told you there are five Elementals. And these days, four of them are living in this house." Roman said slowly to make sure Anaya wasn't rushed.

"H-Here?" Anaya asked. She thought Charlotte was the only Elemental. Right, there are total five of them. But four were already here? In the same house as her?

If that was the case then Charlotte wasn't so special anymore. There were three more people who had cool powers. Think of it like this, Anaya felt better. So Charlotte's supremacy wasn't going to work here anymore.

"Yes, there more of them. And would you like to know who they are?" Roman leaned forward as he spoke. He placed his arms on the desk and smiled.

"Can I?"

"Of course. You even know them very well."

"I do?"

Roman nodded, "I'll tell you then. The four Elementals in this house are - Logan, who is the wood Elemental. Charlotte, the fire Elemental. Me, the Earth Elemental and lastly, you, Anaya, are the water Elemental."

Anaya was listening with her ears open and heart pounding heavily. As he took the names, Anaya felt like her heart could just beat out of her chest and when she heard her name, the frantically beating heart dropped into her stomach.

"Wh-What?" Anaya stuttered.

"Yes Anaya, you are the water Elemental."

Roman smiled, "We didn't know it either. It was only found out after you came here."

An Elemental? How could Anaya be an Elemental? She was always so weak and useless growing up. Other than housework, she didn't know anything else. She never trained, didn't go to school and couldn't even shift easily due to her weak physique. How could such a person possess a power?

"I know it must be difficult to accept. It's a big responsibility to be an Elemental. But I am sure you will master it in no time."

Roman said to ease her worries a little, "You have a natural base when it comes to controlling your element. Even without training, your emotions affect your element."

"With the right training and information, you will be able to do everything, protect, attack and heal."

"Alpha, is this really -" Anaya stopped hesitantly. She didn't want to sound like she was doubting him. It was just so surreal.

"Yes Anaya." Roman said patiently, "If you don't believe me, why don't you try it out yourself?"

Anaya looked up again, "Try it? How?"

Roman poured a little more water into her glass so that the glass was more than halfway filled. He placed the glass right in front of him, making it out of reach for Anaya and gestured to it, "Try to reach the water. Feel the thirst, like you really want it but also can't reach it. Try to call it towards you."

Anaya didn't believe she could do it. After all, she never did something so frightened her so cool. There was a little doubt in her heart but she still went for it.

Anaya lifted her hand up and extended it. Her hand couldn't reach the water without stretching her back. She gulped and thought about the water coming towards her. She really, really wanted it. Just like Alpha Roman said.

"Feel it Anaya. Feel the water, call it. It will listen to you. It is yours." Roman encouraged, "Calm down. Don't force it. Let it come naturally."

Anaya released a lot of force from her body. She sat there with her arms extended like a fool but the water didn't move. She stared at the water, telling it repeatedly to come to her. Maybe she didn't have the talent like Roman said. Maybe she wasn't cut out to be a water Elemental.

Anaya made a fist and pulled her hand back. However, along with that movement, the entire glass of water moved on it's own, tilted and smashed onto the desk. The water that was in the glass splashed way more than it should it. It moved in Anaya's direction.

Anaya was so shocked that she scrambled out of the chair. Roman smiled wider as he saw the movement. He was right about Anaya. She was a natural master of her element.

"So now you know, I was not joking with you." Roman said, "Do you need some time to recover from this surprise or should we proceed with the second important part of this meeting?"

A/N - I was so excited to write this part that I specifically woke up at 6 am to write it because I had a test later on ^_^

I hope this stood up to your expectations! Y'all have to understand that Anaya has started to open up just a tiny little bit and she'll trust Roman soon. Be a little patient.

Also, I know y'all can't wait for the mate part so I am giving Y'all a double update (◡‿◡)
