

Chapter 282

Alex thought that Julian had ignored his wife for so many years. This time, though it was for Sienna's sake, he was at least offering Autumn a way out.

Surely Autumn would take it.

After all, this was the first time in all these years Julian took the initiative to give Autumn something, and not just anything, but company shares.

Everyone knew the value of Carter Group rose by double digits every year, its future potential immeasurable.

If Autumn held shares, she would practically have a cash machine in her hands, money flowing in endlessly.

Ten percent of the shares was a dream many people couldn't even hope to reach. He didn't believe Autumn would refuse.

Yet Autumn only let out a soft laugh, then said word by word, "Tell Julian I won't drop the lawsuit, and I won't settle. He should give up on that idea."

After hanging up, Autumn and Selena went to see her uncle. The moment he saw them, he hurried over to take the things from their hands.

Henry muttered as he received them, "You shouldn't have brought so much. You young people don't understand the importance of money."

"Autumn, next time you come, don't bring anything, or I'll be upset."

Remember that, alright?"

Changing her shoes, Autumn replied, "Uncle, I remember."

Even so, she knew next time she would still bring something. Coming empty-handed to visit always felt impolite.

Selena whispered beside her, "Your uncle's family is so simple and genuine. Families like theirs are rare these days."

"By the way, I haven't seen your cousin in ages. It's the weekend, he should be home, right?"

She had often heard Autumn say her cousin treated her far better than her own brothers.

Back in college, she had met Zack a few times, though so much time had passed her memory was faint.

She only remembered he was tall, with a deep, pleasant voice—a very reliable older brother.

Autumn laughed at her. "Hey, Selena, don't tell me you're interested in my cousin?"

If Selena and her cousin really ended up together, they would make quite a good match.

After all, her cousin's character was flawless; the only drawback was that his family background wasn't as strong as Selena's.

But if they truly loved each other, shouldn't worldly concerns be set aside?

Selena's cheeks flushed as she quickly shook her head in denial. "Don't talk nonsense. I only meant his voice sounded nice. It's just been a long time since I saw him, nothing more."

She had just come out of a relationship. There was no way she could step into another one so soon. Healing from heartbreak took time.

Autumn nodded in understanding, then teased, "Right, you just think his voice sounds nice. Nothing else."

Still, she couldn't help thinking that if her cousin also took a liking to Selena, the two of them might have a story of their own.

With that thought, Autumn walked over to her uncle and glanced around. "Uncle, where's Zack?"

Henry, pouring water, answered, "He got a call and left early this morning. Seemed like a female colleague was looking for him."

"Your aunt knew you were coming, so she went out again to buy groceries. She should be back soon."

"Sit down, have some water and fruit. I'll head to the kitchen to prepare soup."

Autumn nodded, pulling Selena down onto the sofa with her. For some reason, Selena didn't look too happy. 1
