BELLA’S POV

In that electrifying moment, a rush of heat surged to my cheeks as Kane’s intense gaze locked onto mine, an intensity that felt as if it could pierce through the very essence of my soul. It was as though he possessed an uncanny ability to delve into my thoughts, unearthing every hidden fear and flickering dream that danced through my mind like shadows flitting across a darkened room. A smirk played at the corners of his lips, an enigmatic hint of amusement that sent a flutter of nerves spiraling in my stomach. With a fluid motion, he raised his hand and removed a ring from his finger, its surface glinting enticingly in the soft light, drawing my attention like a moth irresistibly drawn to a flame.

“This,” Kane began, his voice deep and resonant, as he turned the ring over in his fingers, “is nothing more than a trinket. Just a simple bauble that wandering wolves often wear.” He paused, allowing the weight of his words to linger in the air, heavy with unspoken meaning. “It’s counterfeit, sold by those underground witches to desperate souls yearning for a taste of power.”

With a casual grace, he tucked the ring into his pocket, dismissing not just the object, but the very notion of power it represented. “It holds no value,” he concluded, his tone dismissive, yet beneath the bravado, I sensed an undercurrent of vulnerability, a glimpse of the man who had faced unimaginable struggles.

I blinked at him, momentarily speechless, my lips parting slightly in surprise. The very sound of his voice resonated with an undeniable strength—deep, unwavering, and intoxicating. It sent shivers racing down my spine, making my knees feel weak and unsteady beneath me.

Yet, despite the magnetic pull of his presence, his words struck a deep chord within me. My mind raced, recalling the whispers and rumors that had floated through the air like dark clouds, casting a shadow over his reputation.

So it’s true... he was cast out. His wolf truly was sealed.

Chapter 5

The realization crashed over me like a cold wave, and I found myself pondering the unbearable hardships he must have endured.

What must his life have been like?

The isolation, the exile, the desperate need to cling to false charms just to maintain the illusion of strength.

My heart ached at the thought of his struggles. It couldn’t have been easy for him. I, of all people, understood that kind of pain all too well.

A flicker of sympathy stirred within me, an unexpected pang of sorrow for the man standing before me, a rogue in a world that had turned its back on him.

And yet... here he was, radiating a presence that felt almost tangible, a strength that was both intimidating and comforting.

Just then, the loud, mocking laughter of Kathy sliced through my thoughts like a knife, a jarring reminder of the hostility that lurked just beneath the surface.

“How touching,” she sneered, her voice echoing through the hushed hall, dripping with a sarcasm that stung like poison. “Our little Bella is marrying a man who buys fake rings from witches.” She clutched Damien’s arm with exaggerated drama, a performance designed to belittle. “Tell me, Damien, doesn’t this make you pity her? You, the true Alpha heir, standing next to this... sealed rogue.”

Damien shifted uncomfortably at her words, his unease palpable, but Kane remained unfazed. He stood tall and composed, exuding a calm confidence that rendered Kathy’s insults impotent.

The atmosphere thickened as Kane finally turned his gaze toward Damien, those intense eyes boring into him like a blade. Even Damien, usually so self-assured, straightened his back nervously under the weight of Kane’s unwavering stare. It was clear that even he could feel the aura of dominance that surrounded Kane. Next to him, Damien appeared boyish, foolish... weak.

A small smile threatened to break free at the stark contrast between the two.

So this is the man Kathy traded me for. An heir, yes, but utterly spineless when faced with true strength.

Kathy’s smirk faltered, her confidence wavering as she sensed the shift in power dynamics. Kane made Damien look like a child who had borrowed his father’s crown, and it was a sight to behold.

“Useless,” she spat suddenly, her eyes flashing with indignation as if she were clawing to regain her lost control. “So he’s handsome. So what? Looks don’t matter if you’re nothing underneath.”

“And Bella—” she turned her attention to me, her voice dripping with disdain, “has always relied on her beauty. She clings to men, trying to seduce and protect herself with her looks because she’s too weak to survive on her own.”

A few onlookers murmured, emboldened by her words, their attention shifting toward me like a spotlight.

Kathy straightened, her posture proud as if she had already claimed victory. “And now, look at you. You’re still pathetic no matter how hard you try. Can’t you see? Fate will never be kind to you. You’re married to a wolf-less man. How will you survive, Bella? Will the two of you smile sweetly and flatter stronger wolves to keep yourselves fed? You’ll be the shame of the entire tribe.”

Her words stung, but they didn't cut as deeply as they once might have. Not after prison. Not after betrayal. Nothing she could say could harm me more than the wounds I had already endured.

I lifted my chin defiantly, locking eyes with her, determination flooding my veins. My voice rose, clear and steady, for all to hear.

"Funny you should say that, Kathy. Because I've only ever had one boyfriend in my life."

Her eyes widened, confusion flickering across her face at my calm demeanor, as if I had just thrown a curveball she never saw coming.

"And do you know what's funny?" I continued, tilting my head with a challenging gleam in my eye. "The first time I saw him naked... it was in your bed."

Gasps rippled through the hall, the air thick with shock and disbelief.

Kathy's face drained of color, her mouth opening and closing in disbelief. "W-what are you—"

But I wasn't finished. I reached into my sleeve, retrieving a small device I had cleverly concealed. With a single tap, the screen illuminated, and the sound of heavy breathing shattered the silence, echoing like a thunderclap.

I raised the phone high, the video playing for all to see, the betrayal laid bare for everyone to witness.

Damien's voice mingled with Kathy's laughter, their bodies entwined in a scene of deceit and betrayal. The footage exposed her shamelessness, an act of treachery that echoed in the shocked gasps of the crowd.

Whispers erupted among the onlookers, gasps of disbelief echoing as hands flew to mouths in astonishment. Older wolves widened their eyes, their expressions a mix of horror and intrigue.

Kathy stumbled back, her hand flying to her mouth in utter shock, while Damien's face paled, the color draining from him as if his very soul had been ripped away.

I held the phone firmly, my heart racing, but I kept my expression steady, unwavering. "You want to talk about shame, Kathy? Let's go ahead."

Conclusion

In the aftermath of that explosive revelation, the air crackled with a newfound energy, one that felt liberating and empowering. I stood at the center of the storm, no longer the timid girl who had once hidden behind her beauty and the shadows of others. The weight of Kathy's insults, her attempts to belittle me, had transformed into a catalyst for my own strength. I realized that I was not just marrying a man without a wolf; I was
