

Chapter 166 He Doesn't Want To Go

Cristina's jaw tightened at the mention of Santino's name.

"How dare you talk about him? You're the reason why Santino is like this." Rhonda's words infuriated Cristina. She forgot what she was doing today.

She vented all her anger on Rhonda.

"If you hadn't hit him when he was down, he would have been out of jail long ago. But now, he has lost his job and freedom. He has lost every damn thing!"

"Well, he deserves it!"

Rhonda garnered people's attention and ruined Malcolm's romantic proposal.

Malcolm grew furious.

Fiona feared Rhonda would suffer losses. Therefore, she wanted to go over and help her. But Malcolm stopped her.

"Your friend is being ludicrous. Can't she put up with it for a while? Why should she quarrel with that woman during such an important occasion? She is causing unnecessary chaos."

"She didn't intend to cause trouble." Fiona glared at Malcolm.

"Gosh, I don't know what she has done to you. Why do you always take her side? Why did you even want to date me? You could have gone out with her!"

Malcolm sprang to his feet, threw the flowers, and stormed out. Fiona was taken aback.

She couldn't fathom why Malcolm became angry when he had been treating her well all this while.

However, Malcolm knew Cristina had come for him. Therefore, he found a reason to leave soon.

Cristina didn't realize her purpose until she saw Malcolm leave. Therefore, she left Rhonda and chased after him.

No one noticed Malcolm leaving in the chaos. But Fiona found something was wrong.

After sending the guests off, she invited Rhonda into her office. "What happened today? Tell me."

At this point, Rhonda had no choice but to tell Fiona the entire story and show her the photos she had taken last night.

The blood on Fiona's face drained.

She never thought that Malcolm would be a hypocrite.

He behaved a certain way in front of everyone and was a whole new person behind closed doors.

Fiona remembered Malcolm blaming Rhonda before leaving, which aggravated her anger. He was a scumbag.

It was all Malcolm's fault, but he blamed others for it.

Rhonda comforted Fiona for a while and left the company.

When she returned to Eden Accounting, Rhonda saw Tamara waiting for her at the door of her office from afar.

She opened the door and walked inside.

Tamara followed her closely and shut the door behind her.

"Rhonda, what's wrong with you? Why didn't you discuss the business trip with me? You put me in a passive position. Didn't you think your decision would affect me?"

"What happened?" Rhonda asked calmly.

Tamara rested her hands on her desk and ordered, "I want you to contact the people of Breavork right now and change the list of the employees going on the business trip."

"No, I can't. They have already booked the air tickets." Rhonda feigned a confused look. "Is something wrong with Kieran?"

"You don't understand. He doesn't want to go to Breavork. That's Harlow's hometown, and I have always sent her there. You should have told me about your plan in advance."

"What? He doesn't want to go there? He never said anything about it yesterday," Rhonda retorted.

"Really? Then, why did he come to me today and say he didn't want to go?" Tamara scoffed at Rhonda.

The condescending look on her face made it seem like she was secretly mocking Rhonda.

However, Rhonda smiled calmly. "I see." She nodded.

This was perhaps a reconciliation within their clique.

Kieran must have got more benefits.

However, Rhonda was in no hurry. What had happened before was just a test. They were yet to face the real significant move.
