

Born For Starlight: The Mysterious Wife Who Stole My Heart

Chapter 16:

Dayna paused for a moment, sneaking a quick look at the man next to her before hitting decline on the call.

She rarely saved numbers unless necessary, and this one was just another unsaved string of digits. Hopefully, Kristopher hadn't paid attention.

Until she knew for sure she could trust Kristopher, there was no way she was telling him who she really was.

The funny thing was, she had once trusted Declan with everything. She had been ready to tell him all of it. But he never had the patience to listen, so those secrets stayed hidden. Looking back now, maybe his cold impatience had been a blessing in disguise.

She took a calm breath and quickly sent a message to Nell.

"What's up, Nell? Can't talk at the moment."

Before she could even turn the screen off, Nell's reply lit it back up.

"Huge case! My dear Wraith, they're tossing money like it's confetti. The first offer's already in the millions. Are you in or not?"

Dayna... was the famous Wraith Physician that everyone had been desperately searching for. The legendary doctor who, according to rumors, could save someone even when they were hanging by a thread.

Her skills were beyond value.

But for the last few years, she had set everything aside to be Declan's wife. She hadn't accepted a case in years unless it was truly urgent.

Her gaze sharpened as the memory of Declan's phone call yesterday surfaced. Suspicion growing, she quickly typed another message.

"Is it Declan?"

She was so caught up in her phone that she didn't notice Kristopher watching her.

Kristopher's lips pressed into a thin line. The way she angled her phone, clearly trying to block his view, it was obvious she didn't want him seeing anything. Was she keeping secrets?

Could it actually be true?

Was Dayna really... the Wraith Physician?
