

Born For Starlight: The Mysterious Wife Who Stole My Heart

Chapter 19:

Dayna took a deep breath and looked straight at Kristopher, meeting his stormy eyes without flinching.

“Two years ago, Sherwood Group tried to mess with Hudson Group to take over the global energy market. But in just one day, they were exposed for fraud and completely fell apart. Then, a year after that, a man from one of Montelure’s richest families crossed you during a cruise trip. The next day, his entire family—twenty-one people—vanished in a fire. Everything was burned down, and not even a single body turned up. So, tell me, Mr. Hudson... what woman wouldn’t feel like she was walking into a tiger’s cage by marrying you?”

She spoke calmly and slowly, like she wasn’t in a rush.

It had only taken her one night to figure out everything Kristopher had been doing abroad for the last three years, and it was all crystal clear. But what really confused her... was how someone so terrifying had once backed off quietly from Arkmery after being betrayed, never coming after her or the Foster Group.

Kristopher didn’t get mad. Instead, he let out a low laugh, the corners of his lips curling just a bit. “So, you’ve been digging into my past?”

Dayna blinked, playing it innocent. “We’re married now, right? Isn’t it normal to get to know each other better?”

Of course, by “getting to know each other,” she didn’t mean telling him she was actually the Wraith Physician.

Kristopher gave a quiet, cold laugh. He clearly knew she was changing the subject, but he didn’t push it. He just looked away and let it go.

For now, he’d let her hold onto her secrets. When the time was right, he knew she’d eventually tell him everything.

They both went quiet again.

Dayna didn’t check her phone. She didn’t dare.
