

Born For Starlight: The Mysterious Wife Who Stole My Heart

Chapter 24:

Declan's expression eased up a little. Of course—Madison was always the sweet, caring one. The kind of girl who acted like she cared about everyone. Not like Dayna.

In his eyes, Dayna was just a lying, bitter woman who couldn't be fixed. And in his mind, marrying her had already been more generosity than she ever deserved.

He turned to Madison with a gentle look. "You're too sweet, Maddie." But then his tone changed, sharp and threatening. "But someone like her—if we let her off the hook, she'll just keep acting out."

Dayna looked at the two of them calmly. There was a time when their silent glances and fake closeness felt like knives stabbing her heart. But now, all she saw was how pathetic the whole thing looked.

One was busy pretending to be the helpless victim, and the other was playing her knight in shining armor.

Honestly, from another point of view, they really were made for each other.

“You’ve been yapping about calling the cops this whole time, haven’t you?” Dayna said coldly. “Then go ahead. Let’s see who really ends up in trouble—me or your sweet, innocent Princess Maddie.”

Declan was stunned for a second, but then his face darkened with rage. “I’ve been nice enough not to embarrass you in public already.”

Dayna snapped back, sharp and full of disgust. “Oh, please. I’m just trying not to throw up looking at the two of you.”

There wasn’t even a hint of love left in her eyes. Kristopher saw it, and oddly enough, he liked it.

After all, Dayna belonged to him now.

Kristopher’s cold stare passed right over Declan and landed on the hotel manager nearby, who looked too scared to even move.

“When did the hotel’s security get so subpar?” he said coldly. “Now just anyone can wander in and start making scenes?”

The manager instantly started sweating. He was just about to say something when an even more arrogant voice suddenly cut in.
